The path of commerce has, in various important directions, been smoothed and widened; and this, in conjunction with the other liberalizing measures, has caused an enormous augmentation in public wealth, and a degree of material prosperity unprecedented in the annals of the Empire. The effect of all these eminently remedial measures has been to weld together more closely than ever the Russian people, and to inspire them with a devotion for their ruler such as the citizens of a free country can scarcely comprehend. The power, therefore, of the Emperor Alexander, is not the old Czar's, commanding slaves to obey, but the power of one regarded as a demigod, commanding devoted worshipers. And now come features that are less agreeable to contemplate. Russia can have no apprehension of aggression from Europe, which would be only too glad to let her alone. Therefore, military and naval preparations on her part, if on a large scale, must be deemed of aggressive significance; and that such preparations have, during the last three years, been actively making, there is not a shadow of doubt. Eight of the recent lines of railways have been designed principally for strategical purposes, so that the difficulties of moving troops in this vast Empire may be no longer apprehended. The army has been remodeled, in accordance with a decree of December, 1870, on the German system, by which in fact almost every man will become more or less of a soldier; and when it is remembered that the population of Russia is more than double that of any other European Power, some idea may be gained of the force at the Czar's bidding. An equal activity has been displayed in the navy, and the fleet is now very considerable, and, what is more to the purpose, is of home manufacture, plate armors and all. This attitude unmistakably means aggressive war whenever diplomacy fails to effect its aim. For the present, St. Petersburg and the Porte appear to be on perfectly friendly terms, and Austria seems to be the point where danger is most likely to occur.

The union of the Sclavic race is a traditional aim with Russia, and longing eyes have been cast by her at the frontier provinces of her Imperial neighbor. Austria would, single handed, probably be no match for Russia, but England could scarcely avoid, averse though she be to war, in consideration of the treaty of 1856, coming to the aid of Austria, and then a frightful contest might ensue. It will be a source of lasting regret if the Czar, who has earned so splendid a title of fame in the path of peace, cannot be content to forego the lust of conquest, and rest satisfied with promoting happiness and civilization. Were he to pass away now, it would be with a reputation adored for all time by his people and their children's children. —N. Y. Times.

Russia and Germany.

OPINIONS OF THE ST. PETERSBURG PRESS ON THE RELATIONS BETWEEN THEM.

(From the Exchange News)

It was natural enough at first to suppose that Germany and Austria should have sought an interview to settle the question of the Roumanian railroads, and we are always loth to believe evil where good may be meant. But now the German and Vienna correspondents have opened our eyes. What do they mean by the aggressive powers, against which Europe is to be guarded? France, thoroughly beaten, could scarce raise a finger in her own defense; Spain, Italy, and England do not dream of conquests. Russia alone remains; against her, therefore, and her alone, is the menace hurled! She, fortunately victorious in Asia, is therefore ready with eager clutch to pounce upon the Danube, the Bosphorus, and even India. She, too, forsooth, is but awaiting the death of the sick man to carry off every stick and scrap he possessed. It is wonderful how perfectly versed are these foreign politicians in our sol distant secret machinations, and how they have settled in their minds that, from the wastes of Kamschatka to the shores of the Adriatic, we mean nothing less than to establish one monstrous Sclavonic empire upon the ruins of the whole of the European, but principally German civilization—nay, to the perdition of every civilized individual on earth. Is Russia patiently to bear this? Should she not draw closer to Austria, and thus isolate Germany as Germany has endeavored to isolate her?

(From the Golos.)

Germany has settled within her own mind that the answer to her well known song,

"Where is the German Fatherland?"

is,

and as, of course, such a programme for German nationality presents nothing quieting for the future, we can see no guarantee for peace, at least from those quarters. Such a programme, of course, bothers Austria most of all, and she seems to acknowledge placidly that instead of contending with such an all-powerful neighbor as Prussia has proved herself to be, a peaceable understanding between herself and Bismark is much to be preferred. A consequence of this conviction we find in the meetings at Ischl, Gastein, and Salzburg. What they have been talking about and settling is a question which puzzles every one, for though no written treaty has appeared about it, to some understanding they have certainly come. Now, the present ruinous position of Austria is known well enough. She sees no issue from her troubles but in federalism or expansion eastward. All her federalistic experiments have hitherto failed, as whatever she has tried to do for one province has met with such jealous opposition from the others that she has been fain to undo what she had done. Her German possessions also cause her endless anxiety and trouble, but without these provinces Austria would lose all claim to be considered a great power, if she did not receive an equivalent in Turkey. The German Cabinet, of course, will have no objection to such an arrangement. A protest can only come from St. Petersburg. It is noteworthy, also, how eager the German newspapers have been to state all those Ischl Gastein, and Salzburg conclaves of crowned heads were not directed against Russia. The very eagerness and haste to root out suspicions which did not exist itself is suspicious. With Austria we were wont to live on pretty friendly terms, and the German St. Petersburg Gazette goes so far as to call Prussia "our natural ally." How could we have thought of suspecting "our natural ally," to whom we have but lately done so much unselfish service, of inimical intentions toward ourselves? But, setting aside all personal attachment and fellow-feeling, matters look rather different. As long as Prussia acknowledged our supremacy in the Baltic Sea, and our rights in the Baltic provinces, there was no chance of any collision. But now German union has become the hobby, and German naval power the question of the day, there has sprung up a commercial antagonism between the Russian and Prussian Baltic ports, and the German propaganda on our Esthonian and Livonian frontiers. Such a state of affairs has rendered idylic relations between the neighbors rather awkward. Without doubt a little wisdom, moderation, and impartiality might entirely remove any threatened danger of collision, but the conquerors of Sedan have already proved to the world what they understand by moderation. One cannot but notice the predominant idea on the banks of the Spree, that Germany has already got all she can out of Russia, and that therefore there is no reason whatever to coquette any longer with her Eastern neighbors.

Our Poor Old World.

War, famine, fire, flood and pestilence are evils which perpetually afflict the human race. Within the present year, our poor old world, in one place or another, has suffered from the ravages of all of them.

In Persia, for many months past, there has been famine of the most appalling character, which has swept the entire length and breadth of the country. It is one of those destructive famines which have appeared from time to time in Oriental countries during all the ages of their history. It was said a short time ago that exaggerated accounts of it had been published; but the recent reports of its ravges which have been received from official sources, leave no doubt that the actual facts of the case are far more horrible than previously represented. Tens of thousands have perished by starvation, amid circumstances inexpressibly shocking, and it appears as though the entire country would be depopulated, for, at the date of our latest advices, the famine continued unabated. The government of Persia is a despotism of the Oriental type, and, instead of adopting means to relieve the suffering of the people, it seems to increase its exactions and oppression to a greater degree than ever.

From China, we have the accounts of the destructive inundations which have swept over the north. They have resulted in a fearful amount of suffering, and a very great loss of life, in those densely populated regions; the people of entire districts have been impoverished by these floods. They have swept away whole villages, destroyed crops and left nothing behind them but desolation. We have read letters describing the scene witnessed in some of these localities, and will only say that they were fearful beyond description.

In the United States the ravages of fire during the last two months have been immense and terrible. Of course the most memorable and impressive incident is the great Chicago conflagration; but the tremendous forest fires in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan, which have raged over thousands of miles, have been far more destructive to life, if not to property. Hundreds of people have perished in them; two villages, with nearly all of their inhabitants, have been wholly consumed; thousands of farmers, with their families, have been compelled to fly for their lives, before the devouring flames; and innumerable farms with their crops and stock, have been blasted and destroyed. The immense extent of these fires, and the appalling suffering that has resulted from them, has hardly yet been realized by the American people.

From pestilence in one form or another, several countries of the world have suffered fearfully during the year. The cholera, which, along with famine, raged in Persia, passed through Russia with limited fatality in July, and soon after appeared in several parts of Prussia, where it counted its victims by thousands. It appeared for a time as though it would break out in France and Great Britain, from whence it could have easily have passed to America, but its progress was providentially stopped before reaching these countries. The most terrible display of the power of the plague, this year, however, has been in South America, in the vicinity of Buenos Ayres, and in that city itself. We have only lately received Buenos Ayres papers containing accounts of its ravages there during the first half of the year, or from January to May. Within that time, nearly thirty thousand victims of the yellow fever perished, of whom twenty-two thousand were buried in one cemetery; a hundred thousand people fled from the city; all business for a time was suspended; and so terrible were the scenes that many men went crazy. The disease also raged in several small towns, carying off their inhabitants by hundreds; and the alarm which the plague spread through the whole Argentine Republic is painful to be read about.

Of the wars which during the year have afflicted the human race, we have lately spoken so fully that it is not necessary at this time to make any reference to them.

Thus it appears that our poor old world—notwithstanding the great discoveries of science and the great advance of civilization—is still doomed to suffer from famine, flood, fire, pestilence and war.—Scot. Am. Journal.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Monday, Oct. 23. I came to Batesville at noon, and in the p. m. left for White County, to see Eld. Lenox, who was not able to be with us in Conference on account of duties at home. Spent two hours in Batesville to get off my mail, and then took my Choctaw Pony, which Br. Rosebraugh let me have instead of "Old Rock," the white mule which had carried me to my meetings for the past three weeks.

Muleology.—Being in the company of a mule for about a month, I have studied something of the character and habits of this animal. The one I had for use proved to be gentle, kind and obedient; slow in motion, to be sure, but this could be improved by the switch, and in no other way. But it is not necessary to beat them with clubs, as many do. Some of them, it is true, are ugly, and refuse the bidding of their drivers, when passion leads to violence and cruelty. This animal is first spoken of in Gen. 36: 24. They were found by "Anah in the wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon, his father." (B. C. 1740.) The Jews were forbidden to raise mules (Lev. 19: 19), yet they had them. Absalom rode a mule when his hair got tangled in the limb of the oak, by which he lost his life; and they were generally used among the Jews, and more or less since by all nations. They are the most hardy of the beasts of burden.

I now have to make my way alone. Previously I have had guides, and good company. Now, like Abraham, I go out, "not knowing whither I go." There being but few houses on the way, if one gets on the wrong track it takes some time to get back. And you meet but very few persons on the road at this time, as the people are all engaged at home in picking cotton. I had between thirty and forty miles to travel through the wilds. Some of the way was plain, and some quite difficult for a stranger. I first passed over White River, South. Here I found the "Bottoms," very rich, teeming with abundant harvests of corn and cotton. Much money can be made on these Bottom lands. But it costs a man his health, and often his life. Fever and ague prevail, and few escape. Next I came over the mountain. Here are woods with plenty of rocks and stones, with a poor soil. Next a level country with some clearings, and good lands. And when ten miles out the sun had gone down behind the Western hills, the air become chilly, and I was alone, a stranger in a strange land. I knew no one in all the region. But Mr. Smith, of Batesville, had kindly referred me to a Mr. Waggoner, on this road, and so I made inquiry, and found I was near his house. I found that he was away, but expected home soon. So I alighted, and waited for the "good man of the house." He said, on his arrival, that when Mrs. W. was alive, he always accommodated strangers; but he was left in solitude with his children, and it was not convenient to care for travelers now. But he added, "I will put up your pony, and you will stop the night, and be welcome."

I talked with him on religious questions, and found he was not a professor. He was brought up a Methodist, but could never accept the doctrine of eternal torment, and so had tried to be a Universalist. When I gave him our views of the destiny of the wicked, he said that looked rational. I gave him some reading on the subject. He told me there were some twenty-five persons recently turned out of the Baptist church in the neighborhood, who, he thought, had views like mine, and so I sent them some papers, having no time to visit them till my return.

Tuesday, Oct. 24. Took leave of my kind landlord, and pushed on for Fairview, an old settlement ten miles ahead. The land on the way was sandy and light, with considerable pitch-pine timber. Some good farming interests, with fruit trees of several kinds. Arrived at Fairview at noon. This village consists of two stores, a church, and about a dozen houses; it looks poor and forsaken; yet it is the largest village I have seen, except Batesville, in all my travels in Arkansas. Indeed, there are no towns, the whole country is settled in farms, and people are isolated, living from one to ten miles apart. And their Postoffices and places of trade are from five to fifteen miles away.

I rode on, solitary, and yet not alone. Nature was talking to me on every side, both the cultivated and the wild, all leading up to God. On the way I was dependent on one guide-board, which I looked for in vain, and so was led off my proper road. But I was set right by a good farmer, and soon I reached the house of Br. Lenox, whom I had come to visit. I was warmly welcomed by him and his family, and felt at home at once.

Eld. L. is a young man, full of the zeal and fire peculiar to the South. Well informed, with a broad, liberal mind, and has been a Baptist minister for some years. He was a captain in the late war, and distinguished himself in his profession. But that is past, and now he looks for the kingdom of God. Within the last year he has been studying the questions relating to the Advent faith, and with some help, has got out quite clear, 'though I found him inquiring, and not fully satisfied upon a number of points. But on seeing them, he exclaimed—"That is it! all right now!" and seemed to rejoice to get at the truth he had struggled to obtain.

The Baptist Association took up the case, and condemned the doctrine, and gave him a half hour (!) to reply, which he improved, when they voted him a heretic. But they might as well have not put the vote, as only a few voted. The rest were with Br. L., or in doubt. The tendency in all this region is to receive the truth.

At night we had a "set down" with some of his neighbors, and settled several points, one of which was the "conversion of the world." He had been perplexed with this idea, as he had always been taught that the world would be converted. When I opened the chart, and showed him that the stone would smite and destroy all the kingdoms of the world, and that the last and seventh trumpet would be a wo trumpet, he exclaimed—"That settles the question: the world's conversion is not a doctrine of the Bible."

I then sung several of our hymns, and gave thanks, and got rest in his new board "box house," as they call it here.

Wednesday, Oct. 25. Have arranged for a series of meetings in the Baptist chapel, and so rest to-day. At night we had another talk, when the fact came out that the first light Br. L. received on the Advent was at Riggsville, from some tracts we sent to that office some years ago, while he was yet a wild young man. But the tracts arrested his attention, and he never lost the impression made by them on his heart. Being converted afterwards among the Baptists, he entered the ministry, and has served faithfully for some years. He had five churches on his hands at one time. But they failed to support him, and so he is now engaged in secular business, to square up, and put his family in such a condition that he can leave them with means to live, and then he will proclaim the gospel of the kingdom to the extent of his ability.

Thursday, Oct. 26. To-day I was introduced to Br. ——, of the M. E. church, South. He is quite a Bible student. He was a Confederate soldier, and taken prisoner and carried North On his return, via New York, a gentleman handed him a tract on immortality. It was written and printed at The Times office, and was, no doubt, one of the 20,000 sent to Br. Walker, in New York city, who has spent much time in the streets handing tracts to strangers. And so the seed is sown. This brother has made himself felt, and the opposition failing to put him down, gave it up, as he carried too many guns for them. Some one sent him tracts on the non-resurrection theory, and against immersion in water, both of which he and others rejected. He got the impression that these papers represented the views of Adventists. But was glad to learn it was not so, and on comparing notes found that he stood on the same platform of truth with us.

At night I spoke in the log chapel of the Baptists. It was open, dilapidated and unfit for meeting, especially in these cold nights; but the subject kept us warm. I had the best attention, and the word on the first and second advents was fully received. A plain statement of truth is all that is needed here. The people drink down the doctrine with all readiness of mind.

This church has invited Br. Lenox to become their pastor, since his condemnation by the Association. But he waits.

Friday, Oct. 27. Visited Dr. Middleton, one of the leading members of the Baptist church. He is a thoughtful man, but conservative, and has yet to be convinced of the truth, as we hold it. We had a free talk on the points of difference, in which he owned up that he could not meet all our arguments; yet from the force of education he remained fixed in his old views—but still considering. He combines the duties of a preacher, physician, and farmer. He has a large farm, cleared up out of the forest, and has a pleasant location near the military road, and the chapel. Like most in these regions he has a large family of healthy children—who are contented and happy in the plain and simple mode of life, not knowing the fashions and show of city life.

I spoke at night to a full house on the soul. A few questions were asked, but the most chose to wait till they should hear on the spirit, and then question me on both points. Br. Lenox is delighted, as he is now sustained in what he has been teaching single handed and alone, 'mid much opposition.

Saturday, Oct. 28. We have clear skies, and genial breezes from the South. To-day Br. Lenox received a note from his friend Samuel Tarver, M. D., saying he could not visit us, as he much desired to do, which we all regretted. In 1866 the Doctor published a work entitled Course and Culmination of Empire According to Prophecy. In his preface he says: "For hundreds of years, serious and sincere men have been trying to solve what Isaiah, and Ezekiel, and Daniel, and John have told us as plainly as they were allowed to tell. It is gratifying to state that, according to most critical and philosophical tests the solution is nearly made. This has not been the work of any particular man or age, but a kind of joint labor accomplished by many."

He sustains the year-day theory, and rejects the idea of a future personal Antichrist; and thinks this dispensation will end in 1935. With much that is speculative and fanciful, the Doctor has said some good things.

Dr. Tarver was formerly a Methodist preacher, but for many years has not followed preaching, but the practice of medicine. He has been one of the live men of the age, and embraced many truths that the church accounts heresy. I was sorry not to see him, and exchange thoughts. I sent him some of our works, and hope to hear from him.

At night spoke on the spirit of man. The crowd increased and some came twenty miles to hear. And the interest is increasing, while some are embracing the truth. The field is ripe and ready for harvest, and God is raising up men to gather it.

Sabbath, Oct. 29. I spoke twice to-day, to a crowd gathered from the region ten to fifteen miles around, all anxious to hear. I discussed the time and place of reward; hell, heaven, hades, sheol, and gehenna, giving chapter and verse for every place where these words are used in the Bible in reference to the future state. Many official members, and elders of the churches were present, but none ventured a question, when the opportunity was offered. In the p. m. I expounded the vision in Dan. ch. 2, showing that the history of this world is nearly filled up, and soon the kingdom of God must come. The truth was generally received by the people. They are hungering and thirsting for it.

One minister was present to-day who some months ago went to hear Br. Lenox to get his views in order to review him. He preached against him several times with considerble zeal; but the more he opposed and studied, the more he felt that he did not understand the question from a Bible point of view, and so he held up. When the association met to deal with Br. Lenox, this minister told them plainly that they did not know what they were opposing, and they had better move wisely.

It is surprising to see the ignorance of some professed teachers in this region. One of them defined the soul recently, as being thought!! Another said it was thinking!!! Immortal thought! Immortal thinking! The Platonic theology has made fools of men, sure.

Monday, Oct. 30, Called upon Dr. Middleton. I find that there is quite a change wrought in his mind on most of the questions about which we have differed. To-day he seems to hang on to the spirit, as though it was an entity, and has taken the concordance, and Bible to settle the question. I wish all would do this. It is the way to get the truth.

I spoke on the kingdom at night. The interest continues unabated, and a continuance of two weeks would change public feeling in all the region, and bring many more into the faith. But I must leave this for Eld Lenox. The work is well begun.

At the close the ministers and brethren spoke freely of the results of the lectures. They had heard nothing that they would controvert, and much that they could sanction, and recommended to all to search the Bible for the truth of these things. There was deep feeling, and some sadness on parting after the enjoyment of so much union and sympathy. But most separated in the hope of meeting again, if not in this state, in the immortal and glorified kingdom.

Before we parted, Br. Lenox said to the audience, that he wanted me to visit them again the next year, and asked all who desired me to return as proposed, to rise to their feet. All rose, though most of them were members of other denominations.

At the close I was pressed to accept the hospitality of Esq. Atkins, the father of this town—Atkinsville. He is one of the pioneers of this Southwestern country. A noble-hearted gentleman, and an industrious and enterprising citizen. He gave me a hearing, and though not a professor of religion, he liked the views I presented. The Disciple preacher, with many others went home with the Esq. and they kept me answering questions till a late hour, when I sang with them, giving thanks, when we all retired to rest.

Tuesday, Oct. 31. The Disciple elder asked me how we received members. I replied, that we received persons after conversion to baptism and the church. But we must see the fruits of faith and repentance first. The water did not change the heart, but the state. We did not believe in baptismal regeneration. And when one of the Disciple preachers in this neigborhood told the people at the water, that he would not baptise a man that was saved, for the reason that baptism was the medium of salvation, I thought it high ritualistic ground. If Christ cannot save me without a Protestant priest, I would quite as leave put my case into the hands of a Popish priest. I do not belive such doctrine. It is carrying things a little too far. Christ says, Come to me, and I will give you rest.

Now came the hour for parting with Br. Lenox. I had spent a week in his family most happily. My visit was unlooked for. He did not know there was such a man, as myself; did not understand about us as Adventists. He had studied his Bible, and some tracts on the Advent, and had embraced and preached the views he found there, for which he was condemned by the Baptist Association. He was downcast, and said he, 'I went away to God and committed my case to him, and then went to my work. And while at work that same forenoon. a young man came to the mill, and inquired for Eld. Lenox. I replied, I am the man; what is wanted. 'I have a letter for you.' And handing it to me I opened and read it with the utmost surprise. It was a letter of sympathy, unsolicited, from an unknown friend. But I said to myself, this is of God."

I had heard of his case, and sent a man forty miles with the letter and some books. He said to me—After my prayer, then the letter, and now your visit! I feel that it is providential. I am with you from this time, and shall unite with your Conference, just as soon as the church shall make final disposition of my case. You can't tell how great a blessing your visit has been to me and mine."

I ought in justice to say that Eld. Lenox, is one of the most popular, and esteemed, as well as able Baptist ministers in Arkansas, and has a wide-spread influence for good. In him our new Conference will receive much help, and the addition of many churches.

In the p. m. in company with Dr. Middleton rode ten miles to Fairview, and was cordially welcomed by Dr. Crosby of the Baptist Church. He had heard me on the last Sabbath at Atkinsville, and was much pleased, and is quite favorable to the Advent faith. I spoke to the citizens at night on the soul. Many questions were asked by them, and much interest was created, and I speak on the spirit of man to-morrow night.

Had a long conversation with Dr. Crosby on the faith. He is shaken in the old system of theology, terribly shaken; and he says he is not alone in this matter. And as far as he has heard me, he says we have the truth. Others express the same sentiment.

Wednesday, Nov. 1. To-day I explained the chart by request of the Doctor, to himself and his visitors. When I got through he remarked, that what he had long struggled to obtain, had now been clearly opened to his mind. He had been in the dark on the kingdom, and the time and order of events, and had too long followed others who had failed to give light on these subjects. Henceforth, said he, "I shall do my own thinking. Others have done it for me too long. I would not take five hundred dollars for the information I have received from the chart to-day. Henceforth I think you will have to set me down as an Adventist. I am with you."

The Doctor is a young man, in the prime of life, a hard student, and is among the most talented of the truth. I send you one tenth of what I have received. I call it the Lord's money, and know of no better way to apply it in his cause.——— Emily L. Marsh, Crawford Co. Pa: I am well aware my gift is small, but one thousand such will pay the debt. I do hope each one will do their duty in the fear of God, remembering that time is short. We must work, if at all, while the day lasts; for the night is near, and we soon shall lay our armor down. There is reason to fear that when our righteous Judge shall come there will be many who profess to love the Lord, that will not be able to stand before him. Lord, help us to be ready, is my prayer.——— C. C. Marston, Esgate's, Iowa: The meeting here was attended with a good interest. The people turned out well and gave good attention to the word. The "spirits" have been at work here, and the "doctrines of devils" have produced a very deletorious influences. But "every dog has his day," and so has Spiritism in this community. It is about dead, and hence our meeting was at the proper time. The brethren seem encouraged and more united, and by the help of the Lord they will regain their former influence and power.——— A sister in a private note says: I intended to send $1 some time ago; and when I read of the brother and sister who were burned out, but sent $1 I could wait no longer. The second Sunday after you were here, I heard a sermon in which the preacher said it would have been better if they had got——— or some other one to attend the funeral. They would have said some words of cheer to the young folks, instead of reading that dry stuff from Revelation and the Book of Moses. And he did not care if the world was full of such stuff (as you had preached), it was an awful delusion. One verse of what Christ said was enough for him—"Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." "Amen," said many. [We have pretty good authority for calling what we preached "good cheer," or "comfort." Read 1 Thes. 4: 18, 1 Cor. 18: 58. ED.]——— ———S. K. Smith Cherokee Co. Kas: My delay in writing is not caused by negligence, but by want of means; for I am deeply interested in THE TIMES and its glorious cause. It is our faithful preacher: but I cannot pay for it at present. By and by I hope to be able to take it again, and also be able to give something more than sympathy and prayers to aid your work.——— ———J. Eshleman, Bremen, Ind: I can't help writing a few lines to you, for I find much truth in reading THE TIMES. My desire is that God would bless all with the truth, and enable us not to err from it. How carefully we should live in these last days; for I am sure we are in them. Look at the times from what point we will, they appear like the last times. As for myself, I need much of God's grace. I try to believe his word as far as I understand it. Some things I cannot see altogether plainly, and may be shall not in this life: but I believe God will give us the light necessary to carry us through. I would like to meet some of you face to face, and have a chat on Scripture. And I hope to meet all in that happy world where the Lord's will shall be fully done.——— Jessie Lawrence, St. Johns, Mich. I have but little to give, but it is as freely given as though I was able to give $500. We have a little church here that is trying to breast the waves of persecutions and opposition of these days, and with the help of Lord and the prayers of his believing children, we shall come off more than conquerors. Don't forget to pray for the weak ones. It is only about six months since I started: but how sorry I am I did not start before.——— W. H. Jarvis, St. Paul, Minn: A Romanist for thirty years, and then an infidel until 1868, when through Br. O. R. Fassett I was converted to the truth, I have if any man has a reason to be thankful for my hope. At seventy years of age but little of man's life is left to me to do good, yet only serving from the eleventh hour. I took for my "penny." I had written out my experience, hoping it might benefit others, but have changed my opinion of its value and commit it to the flames. [We are sorry for this resolution. We should like to see it. ED.]——— Br. A. Baily, Ancona, Ill: I want to do all I can to advance the interests of the truth, in all ways which are right in the sight of God. We must be firmly united in these days of peril, for only united we stand; divided we must fall. I only wish I was worth enough to place your office with every appliance needed in the city of Chicago, and then keep it running night and day till Jesus shall come.——— J. A. Smith, Illinois: THE TIMES, with the exception of one sermon is all the Advent preaching I ever heard, and I can assure you I enjoy its teachings. The constant expectation of the revelation or appearing of our Savior the Lord Jesus Christ to reward his saints, is one of the grandest themes our minds can feast upon. The blessed Bible is a new book to me; for now I "behold wondrous things" in it, and it is my meditation day and night. My prayer is that the "Householder" may soon return to his vineyard, and give it to those which shall render him the fruits in their season.

From S E Mabey Amboy Ill.

I am at home again after a glorious Quarterly meeting at Yorktown. It was well attended, interest good. Many of the dear saints are growing stronger in the Lord and his word, that it is almost fulfilled, and the next event is the time of trouble when Michael shall stand up to deliver all whose names are found written in the Book of Life. Our meetings increased in interest and numbers. The Lord was with us in power. All glory and praise unto his blessed name forever. It seemed as if some of the camp-fire was being kindled up anew while some spoke of renewed consecration and joy at the Amboy camp, also of determination to be there again if the chance ever offered. Our communion was one of deep and thrilling interest, while all were invited who love the dear Lord and Redeemer and remembered that he was to come again, and that right speedily. Consequently the tearful eye was turned from Calvary's bloody scene and Golgotha's dark shades, where death and the devil triumphed "a little while" over the Prince of Life and glory. But their triumph over the destined King and Ruler of earth was short. The bars of the tomb were broken asunder; the mighty conquerer lives forever; and because he lives we shall live, also.

Forward to this soon-coming day our eye is fixed with steady gaze, entranced and enraptured, as were the disciples of old while shining seraphs questioned them why they were gazing up into heaven, and declared that "the same Jesus which was taken up into heaven, should come again in like manner." Then "he will show in his times who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." He will destroy death and him that had the power of death, that is the devil. (Heb. 2: 14.) "He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." (1 Cor. 15: 25, 26.)

The ordinances of the church as taught in the gospel all point to the living Savior and his coming again. "For as often as ye do eat of this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he be come." What a blessed keepsake is left us. May the Lord help us as waiting children to appreciate and obey the ordinances with delight.

From M R Miles Wolcott N Y.

I am still trying to win a bride for my Master. The Lord has been with me and his glorious truth. Have held two tent meetings, besides having the charge of two churches. During those meetings there were twenty-three baptised; also three in one of the churches where I preach, since June last. Others have been stirred and backsliders reclaimed. To the Lord is all the praise. I am weak but he is strong. I am glad to see articles on consecration, holiness of heart. We must be holy if we would see the Lord in peace. In '43 what consecration; what brotherly love, what unity of the faith. Men and women were wholly given up to the service of God, ready to meet the Lord. The time passed; some went back into the churches, some into the world, some held on: but their love grew cold. They had the theory, but not the love of it. We need a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit. May we get into a position where we can receive it.

From D S Olney, Ogdensburg N Y.

We are living in an isolated region as to the gospel preaching. There are some in this city of like precious faith with us. Still we hope the day is not far distant when a door may be opened for investigation of the Bible in its true light, and the blind be made to see the blessed truth of the gospel. We feel no less interest in the Advent cause, and hope and pray that effort to promote it may be blessed of God, in bringing light to the darkened understanding of mankind. I know by sad experience how hard it is to give up our old traditional training, and nothing but my unwillingness to investigate the subject kept me back for fourteen years. Then I commenced to examine the Scriptures to see if these things were so, I became satisfied that I had been studying in the dark. I thank God that I now see, and hope that I may ever be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.

An Interesting Book.

While in Chicago, three weeks ago, I purchased a little book called "The study of the Bible: A series of chapters intended to promote truth and unity;" written and compiled by Henry Dunn, of the British and Foreign School Society, and published by the well known house of G. P. Putnam & Sons, New York City. This I say for its general scope and fulfillment of "intention;" but it has special points of interest for Advent people. For instance (page 83): "To avoid practical untruthfulness, the word sheol, which is commonly translated in the Old Testament 'hell,' should never be used as if it implied the place of future punishment. When the Psalmist says 'The wicked shall be turned into hell' (Ps. 9: 18), why should we shrink from admitting that he simply means the grave? It is the same word which is used prophetically of Messiah, 'Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell' (Ps. 16: 10.) It is the same word that Jacob uses when he speaks of his 'gray hairs' being brought 'with sorrow to the grave.' (Gen. 42: 38.") And so read on—remaining paragraphs on p. 83, and pp. 84–85. All worth of being quoted because of the supporting acknowledgment of truths of interpretation, coming from an orthodox but candid source. And I venture to say that your readers would be gratified if you should quote entire Dr. Maitland's remarks "on the study of unfulfilled prophecy, as connected with the interpretation of Scripture generally." Prefixed to the chapter is the first verse of one of Bonar's most beautiful hymns—(why was it not inserted in the Jubilee Harp? I cannot find it there; reading,

"The church has waited long
Her absent Lord to see;
And still in loneliness she waits,
A friendless stranger she.
Age after age has gone,
Sun after sun has set,
And still in weeds of widowhood
She weeps a mourner yet.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!"

"We add nothing to these admirable words, beyond expressing our firm belief, uttered under a deep sense of responsibility, that, 'to those who have made their calling and election sure,' a right understanding of the purposes of God in regard to the coming kingdom of Christ is the most important object to which they can direct their attention." The italics are the author's. The succeeding chapter, "On a right understanding of the dispensation under which we live," is scarcely less interesting to the reader who has embraced the Advent doctrine. Again Bonar's pious poetical fervor supples the sweet introdutory verse:

"Far down the ages now,
Her journey well nigh done,
The pilgrim church pursues her way,
In haste to reach the crown;
The story of the past
Comes up, before her view;
How well it seems to suit her still,
Old and yet ever new!"

On p. 151, the author says: "The apostle clearly associates the triumph of Christ with the resurrection. [Italics are the author's.] When he quotes Isaiah's prophecy, 'Unto him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess,' (ch. 45: 23), he connects it with the day when 'every one of us shall give account of himself to God,' (Rom. 14: 11.) And again, when he quotes the same prophet as predicting a period when the 'veil that is spread over the face of all nations' shall be removed (Is. 25: 7–8), he, like the prophet, looks for its fulfillment only at the resurrection—the period when 'death is swallowed up in victory.' (1 Cor. 15: 54.) —C. in Crisis.

The Children's Free-will Offering.

Dear Press: Here I am again, with pencil in hand, urged by the little folks, to write to you, and also to send on their "free-will offering," made up from—"Pa, where's my five cents—have'nt you got 'a nickel?'" There is no forgetting on their part until Pa sits down and fumbles his pockets and hands over "the mite." Then away they run for "their banks," the little tin ones, and down the red chimney chink it goes.

But now, the end of the month has come, and the Press needs the mites. Down come the banks, and the merry shaking and determined picking brings the last coin from its hiding place. So here they are—twelve shining nickels, worth sixty cents. "Why Pa's got a handful of money to send to the Press!" "Yes," says little Debbie, "if all the children would send five cents a week, Mr. Press would have a 'big stove pipe hat full.'" And she says Pa must send an extra five cents for her because she is the littlest. So, Br. Press, you will please receive from Debbie, four years old, 25c.; Samuel, seven years, 20c.; Eva, eleven years, 20c.

In behalf of the little ones.

LAND.—Mary A. only daughter of Joseph and Martha Land, died Sept. 20, 1871, aged 1 year, 5 months and 2 days.

She was a great sufferer for many weeks, while her parents were doing all in their power for the little one. She fell asleep in Jesus, to wake in the morn of the resurrection in robes of immortality. And may God help the parents to be as well prepared to meet their God as their child was.

.... Brigham Young has run away—probably to wait till 'the storm blows over.' There are some indications that the Mormons will give up practical polygamy.

.... The November elections seem to favor the Republicans everywhere. The corrupt officials of New York were thoroughly defeated, and if it were proper thus to speak of such immoral persons, we should say they were demoralized. Some seem to think the millennium is about to dawn in consequence of the popular uprising against fraud and corruption. But we shall see.

ABROAD.

.... The Moscow Gazette, in an editorial article, counsels Russia to demand the neutralization of Denmark and cession of Schleswig to the latter, as a means to counteract the power of Prussia on the Baltic.

.... The war in Cuba has cost Spain $62,000,000 the last year. The following items of news came by telegraph in significant contiguity: "The steamer Isla de Cuba arrived, yesterday, at Santiago de Cuba, with troops from Spain. The corner-stone of the new cemetery will be laid here to morrow."

.... Mail advices from Africa say that on the west coast the people are dying off from small-pox like sheep. The deaths were 12 per cent. of the number attacked. The Jujuman priests are very busy instilling into the minds of the ignorant natives the idea that the disease is a judgment of their Juju, or gods, on the people embracing Christianity.

.... In a letter to the London Times, of the 1st inst., from Persia, an English official states that the people were then more emaciated than ever. At least 2,000 besiege the English residency for food every morning, and in their rush actually crushed two women to death. Infants and young children are lying about the streets scarcely recognizable as human beings.

.... A heavy earthquake occurred at Iquique, and in the interior of Peru on the 5th of October. There was great damage done to buildings. The effects were more disastrous in the interior, where the towns of Pica and Matilla were destroyed, scarcely a house being left standing. A fire succeeded the earthquake at Pica. At Varaipaca, the church, Pantheon, eighteen houses and the dam of the river were destroyed. Very few lives were lost.

.... If France takes the advice of her journalists, she will abandon the idea that she can ever find a useful ally in England. Mr. Gladstone's speech at the Mansion House seems to have settled the question of the obstinate German leanings of Great Britain. Russia is therefore designated as the true ally of France, and as Partisan critics assume that Russia has been very sulky since the German and Austrian Emperors had their late interviews, it will not be difficult to convince the French public that a Russian alliance is their quickest road to revenge.—N. Y. Times

.... M. Gambetta made his expected speech at Quentin lately. His tone was moderate, and the speech has an excellent effect on the public opinion. He assured his hearers that no danger at present menaced the French republic but reforms were necessary to confirm it. The people should see that legislation to that end be not kept back too long in the National Assembly. Citizens should take a more active practical interest in political affairs, and make their influence felt in the government, to give their power a legitimate effect. He advocated the formation of a National Republican party, and set forth in detail a plan of organization which is based in many respects upon the American system.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 36½ down to 20½. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh: it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

Purgatory.

The Central New York Catholic, published at Syracuse, recently had an article with the above caption, in which the Catholic dogma of purgatory is very strongly endorsed. As might well be expected, however, nothing can be more inconclusive than the reasoning employed. The doctrine of purgatory as an established dogma of the Catholic church is of rather modern origin as it was first authoritatively declared about the middle of the sixteenth century by the Council of Trent which expressed itself in the following manner: "The Catholic church, instructed by the Holy Spirit, has taught in her Councils from the sacred writings and the ancient traditions of the Fathers and this synod has now recently declared, that there is a Purgatory, and that the souls there detained are helped by the suffrages of the faithful, but principally by the acceptable sacrifice at the altar." Purgatory itself is defined to be a "middle state between heaven and hell wherein souls are punished, before their admittance into heaven."

The Church at Rome recognizes three separate states or places of the dead. The souls of the righteous dead go immediately to heaven. All souls stained with venial sins that remain unpardoned at death, go to Purgatory. The souls of the incorrigibly wicked are judged to merit and receive hell's eternal torments. Nothing can be more absurd than the Catholic's argument based on passages from the Old Testament. "Behold Jacob mourning for Joseph, under the impression that he was devoured by a wild beast. 'I will go down to my son in hell mourning.' (Gen. 37: 25.) And the royal Psalmist exclaims: 'Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell;' again, 'Thou hast delivered my soul, oh! Lord from the lower hell;' (Ps. 86: 13.) Such a hell cannot be the abode of the damned from which there is no deliverance."

Scarcely less irrelevant and inconclusive are the alleged proofs from the New Testament. "Our Divine Redeemer raised to life the daughter of Jairus, also, the son of the widow and Lazarus. And when he himself yielded up the ghost, 'many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and coming out of the tombs after his resurrection, came into the Holy City, and appeared to many.' (Mat. 27.) These souls of the saints, that had slept, were not in heaven, nor were they in the hell of the damned; but as Peter says: 'He went and preached to those spirits that were in prison.' Here also must have rested the soul of the penitent thief, to whom Christ said, when dying on the cross: 'This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise.' In St. Matthew, 5: 35, 36, we read of a prison from which the soul shall not depart until it shall repay the last farthing. In the hell of the damned there is no last farthing to repay but eternal indebtedness. And Lazarus died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died, and was also buried in hell. Abraham was not in heaven, nor was Lazarus. Christ, addressing the Pharisees Mat. 12: 32, says: "whoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but he that shall speak against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world or the world to come." If sins are not forgiven in the world to come Christ's words are meaningless.

"Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians is very clear in his inculcation of this doctrine of Purgatory. He says: 'For other foundation no man can lay but that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble, every man's work shall be manifested; for the day of the Lord shall declare it, because it shall be revealed in fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide, which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work burn, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved yet so as by fire.'

"We might, if space permitted, show how clearly both Origen and St. Augustine explain this text, and prove from it the doctrine of Purgatory. We might here bring forth many other proofs(?) of this beautiful(?) dogma of our Faith. We might prove it from the Councils, the Fathers, and the creeds that the doctrine of Purgatory has been believed by the faithful of God's Church in every age.

"We might now if time and space permitted, show how beneficial to the the souls in Purgatory, are the prayers and alms of the faithful, and especially the benefits derived from the great sacrifice of the Mass.

"It would be most interesting here to give a few of the inscriptions found in the Roman Catacombs, proving this holy practie of praying for the dead. If then we know that our friends are in suffering, or even suppose it, can we refrain from helping them by prayers and charity and sacrifice? Who can refuse to perform this office for the dead? Who will forget a father, a mother, a brother, a sister, a dear friend, or these suffering friends of God? What Christian heart can resist that piteous appeal that ascends from that dreary prison from which no one is released 'until he has paid the last farthing?' Who can forget that the sufferings that these souls now endure, may yet be our lot, and that he may yet undergo that terrible purgatory of which the apostle speaks." The reader will please notice that the foundation on which this monstrous fiction of purgatory is built is furnished in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Take away this tenet from the Catholic faith and the invocation and worship of saints, prayers for the dead, purgatory and Mariolatry would cease to be practiced or believed. It would be insulting the intelligence of the Protestant reader to attempt a formal refutation of the doctrine of purgatory, or to show the utter irrelevancy of every passage of Scripture quoted above in support of it. The first and most important thing to decide is whether such a doctrine has any foundation upon which to rest. Most Protestants decide that the foundation is all right, "orthodox" and "evangelical." They are thus precluded from laying the ax at the root of the tree. If the souls of our deceased friends are suffering in some limbo or other before the judgment, is it not reasonable that we should pray for their release? The Protestant who admits the immortality of the soul can make but little headway against the practice of praying for the dead. JAMES H. WHITMORE.

The Harmony of Scripture on Future Punishment.

MORTALITY PUTTING ON IMMORTALITY.

We proceed, therefore, to inquire whether the Scripture doctrine of resurrection involves the idea of universal immortality. Will the resurrection of of the body confer immortality in all cases?

There is obviously no moral necessity that it should be so. All might be raised from their graves for the purpose of retribution and reward, without all being raised "to the life immortal." The continuance of their restored life might depend upon the judgment passed upon them for the deeds done in the body. All must be raised from the dead in order to be judged by that man whom God hath appointed. But what is there to prevent sentence of death being then passed upon those who are "worthy" of it—not temporal, and bodily, death only, but eternal death, that is death from which there is no recovery, and of the whole man, body and soul?

I will venture to say that no a priori reason whatever can be assigned for rejecting such a view, and that the only question for us is, What saith the Scripture?

Now, it is not a little remarkable that in every place where resurrection is spoken of as securing immortality, it is with exclusive reference to the resurrection of them that are Christ's at his coming; while in every place, where the resurrection of the wicked is directly mentioned, care seems to be taken to show that it will not be "after the power of an endless life."

a. Luke 20: 35, 36. "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age (the millennial), and the resurrection from amongst the dead (the first resurrection—the resurrection of the just), neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more."

John 6: 40. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one who seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

John 11: 26. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall not die for ever." The believer may die for a time ("the body is dead because of sin"), but not forever.

1 Cor. 15: 54. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Does this refer to the wicked as well as the righteous? Is death swallowed up in victory in the case of those, who, it is alleged, rise to an immortality of wretchedness, whose bodies are made incorruptible, only that they may never be consumed by the unquenchable fire into which they are cast? Are their bodies sown in dishonor and raised in glory, sown animal bodies and raised spiritual bodies? Will they bear the image of the heavenly? Can anything be clearer than that the apostle here is speaking of the saints alone?

b. Dan. 12: 2. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here it is implied that the resurrection of the latter will not be to everlasting life. The wicked will rise to a sense of shame, and to be the objects of everlasting contempt. "The memory of the just is blessed;" and the memory of the unjust will be accursed. This idea, we may observe in passing, is abundantly sufficient to meet the alleged necessity for keeping the unsaved alive forever, namely, that otherwise there would be no adequate manifestation of God's wrath against sin. Surely the never forgotten history of evil, with the living monuments of redemption from evil, will meet every possible requirement, without the continued existence of evil to all eternity.

John 5: 29. "The hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." To what these latter will be condemned is to be inferred from the contrasted blessing. If the lot of the righteous is to be life, the lot of the wicked must be death. More will be said on these words presently.

Rev. 20: 5, 6. "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." This of course implies, that on "the rest of the dead" the second death will have no power; in their case, mortality will not put on immortality, nor will death be swallowed up in victory.

In the much disputed parable (if it is be properly called a parable) of the sheep and the goats there is no mention of resurrection at all. It closes our Lord's reply to the question, "what will be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the age?"—that is, of this dispensation; and it describes the judgment of "all the nations," which will then take place. However clear may be its moral aspect, its prophetic interpretation is beset with the gravest difficulties. But if, as many believe, its last words look on to the final destiny of all men, we find the same contrast that has been noticed so often already, again presenting itself: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into everlasting life." The punishment therefore must consist, not in an everlasting life of misery, but in the loss of everlasting life altogether. And it must be called everlasting or eternal for the same reason that the fire which consumed Sodom is called "eternal fire"—namely, because its effects are final and irremediable. It is evident that the word eternal as applied to any act, or to anything which involves an act, does not prove that the action will continue forever. Eternal redemption is not eternal redeeming, eternal judgment is not eternal judging, eternal fire is not eternal burning; then why should eternal punishment necessarily be eternal punishing, and eternal destruction eternal destroying? The one sole answer that can be given is, that man being immortal cannot be destroyed, and that therefore the words must be understood in some sense which will harmonize with that presumed immortality. Take out this postulate, and the passage affords not a shadow of proof that the wicked will be forever conscious of pain[1]—(To be continued)—S. Minton.

Meditation.

To my mind it is profitable for God's people to make the most of every event bearing upon the fulfillment of prophecy, rather than cultivate the expectation of some more wonderful demonstration, by which the unbelieving world as well as themselves, will be assured of the coming day. Such a demonstration will come (see Mat. 24: 30); but when it comes it will be too late to seek a preparation for it; for "then shall all tribes of the earth mourn," though for the believer a day of triumph and joy.

As to the thrilling events of the past few years, the world with cultivated artfulness would explain them all away. They call to their assistance history and science, to show that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation;" and why all this? because they do not want to be instructed or admonished. To entertain these thoughts would dampen their earthly pleasures, and that would make them miserable, as they know no other hopes or joys.

The exercise of believers is very different; they wish to believe and draw instruction and warning from every thing which appears to duplicate the words of holy writ; but may I not ask if we do not suffer loss from our daily contact with this unbelieving, pleasure-seeking age? the very air we breathe and every sight we see is tainted and stamped with unbelief. Do we not feel our hearts imperceptibly drawn away from the warning which the events of nearly every day furnish us? And unless we prayerfully contemplate the prophets and the page of history, by which we know beyond all possible doubt, that the kingdom of God is just at the door, there will gather a relish for earthly things, and arrangements for days to come will insinuate themselves unto our minds. Beside, the fear of the stigma which others have suffered, and the prospect of coming to want, are barriers to the exercise of that faith that once condemned a world.

How clearly our blessed Lord saw these times when he said, "take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." (Lk. 21: 34, 35.)

Surely, for the joy that is set before us, we can well afford to watch and wait, till the vision tarries no more.—E. Wolcott, in Herald of Life.

[1] I have not touched on the question whether the word (aionios, eternal) is to be understood in its limited or unlimited meaning, when applied to future punishment. It is a difficult and important question, but happily not one that it is necessary to decide for the purpose of this argument. It is neither necessary to affirm the limited sense, in order to prove that all will not live forever in happiness. In the two passages where the question is thought to be of the most consequence, there is considerable difficulty on either side.

1. From the expression "everlasting life" being so continually applied to the final condition of the righteous, it is difficult to believe that it is not at least included in the same words at the close of Mat. 25: 5; and if so, it is almost equally difficult to believe that the "everlasting punishment" does not also refer to the final doom of the wicked.

2. In the Apocalyptic visions, it is very difficult, notwithstanding all that can be said about an aion (age) being necessarily limited, to resist the impression that the "ages of ages" is meant to designate an endless period. Yet, after the burning of Babylon, and the casting of the wild beast into the lake of fire, St. John sees "a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." Either, therefore, the smoking ruins of Babylon and the lake of fire have been transferred to some other world, —a gratuitous assumption of the most violent improbability,—or else they have "passed away" in the general renovation of the earth ("I make all things new") to which they belonged. The new heaven will not be forever darkened, or the new earth forever begrimed with the clouds of smoke ascending either from the site of the seven hilled city, or from some new valley of Hinnom.

Signs of the End.

God hath his blessed gospel given,
To fit our many souls for heaven;
But most the precious treasure spurn,
No care its precious truth to learn.
This is a signal that the end is near.

True search for the word of God,
By greed and lust for earthly good
Is overborne: and yet men say,
Danger and doom are far away!
This is a signal that the end is near.

Inventions daily multiply,
Ungodliness to deify,
And by mere human might to seize
Whate'er may bless, whate'er may please.
This is a signal that the end is near.

The Christian name is greatly praised,
Yet few to pious lives are raised;
In truth, God's laws are all defied,
And man exults in godless pride.
This is a signal that the end is near.

Where now can brother's love be found?
All lands with robbery abound.
There is no faithfulness, no faith;
"Give me but money," each one saith.
This is a signal that the end is near.

Feasting now is the world's chief trade,
And villainies all ranks pervade,
From all restraint each would be free,
And earth is full of infamy.
This is a signal that the end is near.

Come, therefore, blessed Lord and King,
And with thee earth's deliverance bring;
Thy creatures from hell's fire defend,
Make thou of all these ills an end,
And let us see the longed for judgment day.

New Testament Testimony.

Has it never occurred to the reader, as to myself, when searching for Biblical language in which to present and enforce the eternity of future suffering, to be surprized and puzzled to observe how unsatisfactory and feeble seem all the apostolic references to future unending wo? In fact, throughout John's gospel and the Epistles, where the doctrines of the New Testament are especially unfolded, future punishment is mentioned only under some term of death or destruction! How simple is Christ's language all through John, beginning with the gospel in Epitome, as Luther called it, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (Jno. 3: 16.) And so throughout this gospel he ever sets simple life against death. Surely, this is no figure of speech. To "perish." We do not believe that our Lord anticipated the need of a commentator, as we have ever had for us, to explain that "perishing" and "death" mean everlasting life in misery, while "everlasting life" should read everlasting happiness, or something of that kind. Ah! may we not well inquire whether the church of to-day is not, like the Pharisees of old, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men?" (Mat. 15: 9.)

In the Acts of the Apostles, that missionary record of the first planting of the gospel, among all its reports and outlines of sermons, should we not expect to find some explicit notice of eternal suffering, if such there be? Here is every passage it presents on that question: (1.) Ch. 3: 23, "Every soul which will hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." (2.) 13: 41, "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder and perish," (literally, vanish away.) (3.) v. 46, "Unworthy of everlasting life." (4.) 17: 6, "When they opposed themselves and blasphemed, he shook his raiment and said, Your blood be upon your own heads: I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." Thus to these blaspheming Jews, instead of setting forth as their punishment a hell of eternal torment, Paul solemnly tells them they must answer for their conduct with their lives—"your blood." (5.) 24: 15, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust." And this is absolutely all that can to be found on this subject in Acts.

Nor will anything more in any epistle be found, expressing a thought of the eternity of torment. What! you may exclaim, has not James, plain spoken and practical as he is, has he not left us in his epistle one unmistakable declaration of future unending wo? Let us see. Ch. 1 v. 2, he tells us that as the grass withereth when the burning sun rises upon it, "So shall the rich man fade away in his ways;" evidently referring not alone to that closing of mortal life which all must undergo, for in the next verse, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life." Verse 15, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Ch. v. 3, The rust of your gold and silver shall eat your flesh as it were fire; and verse 20, "He that converteth the sinner shall save a soul from death." Here we have the entire testimony of James. It is plain and to the point,—Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death!

Perfectly accordant with this is the testimony of Peter. It is simple, intelligible, explicit, if taken literally; if we take it as usually explained, as referring to an unending life of misery, we must confess it is strangely lacking in expression and illustration. For example, we have in ch. 1 v. 23, the Apostle speaking to and so of individuals, not simply of their bodies—"Being born again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. For all flesh is as grass,....the grass withereth,....but the word of the Lord endureth forever." Like the grass the individual begotten of corruptible seed naturally perishes, (withereth, says Peter—fades away, says James), but when the same is regenerated, born again of incorruptible seed, by the word of God, he then liveth and endureth forever! It is the same, simple, old story—death or life, and each state eternal.

We have not room for Paul's many utterances on this subject. Take as samples, two or three passages in which, if anywhere, we should look for an unequivocal expression of the whole truth. First, Philippians 3: 18, 19, "Many walk of whom I have told you often, and tell you now even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction." Affected even to weeping by the thought of their impending doom, had that fate been an endless existence in torment, would Paul have contented himself with this word, which suggests rather a total arrest of all existence?

Again, Gal. v. 19–21, after a catalogue of the vilest crimes the Apostle sums up, "Of the which I tell you before as I have told you in time past, that they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Here Paul speaks of the loss such evil doers sustain, but not one word of the immeasurable suffering to be inflicted through all eternity! Thus silent in every epistle on this point, how, if such a fate were before the men of his time, could he say as in Col. 1: 28, "Warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom?" What is the only fair inference from all this? Unquestionably, that Paul had not a thought of immortality for the wicked!

But once more, notice a passage which appears to me to be incontrovtible. In 1 Cor. 15: 54, 55, we read, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The whole context proves that Paul here speaks of that mortal death which has passed upon all men. In v. 57 he continues, "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." The victory over death: what is it? In the first of these verses the Apostle has defined it for us in so many words, as "corruptible putting on incorruption, and this mortal putting on immortality." So that according to the Apostle, the attainment of a literal immortality, of life beyond the grave is the victory over death; and this victory, he declares, comes to us through our Lord Jesus Christ. All men then do not possess it, for it is given to "us" only through Christ. Is it not then a logical inference, nay, the plain teaching of this passage, that for those out of Christ, there is no such victory, that for them the corruptible does not put on incorruption, the mortal does not put on immortality. Deny this who can? It is "our Savior Jesus Christ, who has brought life and immortality to light." (2 Tim. 1: 10.) Apart from him there is no immortality!

In this connection let me refer the reader to the last of the Old Testament prophets, Mal. 3: 18; 4: 1, "Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. For behold, the day that cometh, shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." What is left of the stubble if both root and branch are burned up? Shall we say that this solemn declaration from the Lord of hosts is a mere figurative use of language? Or rather, could words be chosen more fitly and fully to announce the literal destruction of the finally impenitent? I picture to myself that intensely heated oven; I see the dry stubble, plucked up by the roots from the ground it cumbers, thrust into its open mouth; its hot breath seizes upon it, a moment of fierce crackling when the flame leaps even higher than before—all is over; the destruction is complete, naught but ashes remains. And then I turn again to Malachi, and the next verse but one I read, "The wicked shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in that day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts."

And the next succeeding prophet, whose coming was in this very chapter foretold by Malachi, John the Baptist opens the New Testament teachings on this topic with the same language and figure. He proclaims of the Messiah, "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." (Mat. 3: 12.)

And again he, who speaks as never man spake, repeats the same solemn announcement. "AS therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, SO shall it be in the end of the world." (Mat. 13: 40.) After all this, these repeated declarations from the Lord of hosts, from inspired prophet, and from the Son of God, can it be that we venture, mentally if not audibly, to reply, not so, Lord: the tares, the chaff, the stubble, are burned up and literally destroyed, but we cannot believe that the wicked are "so" destroyed. Shall we presume thus to "make void the word of God through our traditions?" (Mk. 8: 12.)—C. L. Ives, in American Edition of Constable's Work.

Charity.

Much is said among Christians about having charity for erring humanity. If a person commits never so detestable a crime and it is spoken of as becoming anything but an honorable man they cry out, "Have charity, have charity! We are commanded in the Bible to have charity." Especially if this person is a member of some church most of his fellow members consider it their duty not to reprove him or turn him out of their society as a taint upon it, but rather to cling the closer to him and throw over his misdeeds the cloak of the church's protection, and practically utter a joint lie in endeavoring to make the world think that the man is innocent of the crime. Such false notions have led many honest but short-sighted persons into sad mistakes. In their zeal to be charitable they have forgotton ever to tell their brother that he has done wrong and must not repeat the offense. Unless he be a man of deep insight he will mistake their protection for participation and be led to think that whatsoever he may do they will support him in. And the church gradually getting accustomed to the exercise of charity, as they term it, and themselves unconsciously forgiving and covering up on to the bitter end. This has brought the church into disrepute.

By church I mean the Christian world at large. It has become a byword that if a person wants to commit crime with impunity he must join, not the Masons or the Odd Fellows, but the church. Once under its broad protecting wings, he can "Seem a saint when most he plays the devil." This error on the part of many Christians was forcibly impressed upon my mind last Sunday evening while listening to a sermon by an Episcopal minister upon James 4: 11. He asked "if a church member committed a sin, was it not best to cover it?" and seemed to think that it were better to do so, as the reputation of the church was at stake.

What an argument! If the reputation of Christ's gospel itself depends upon my acting a lie or your acting a lie, are we to do it? A thousand times no! Chiefly because it does not rest upon any such thing. If a church is dependent upon lies for support, down with the church, and build upon the solid rock of truth. But the Bible does not teach us any such kind of charity as the majority of church members seem to think it to be our duty to practice.

We are no where commanded to cover sin. I would not have every man stoned to death that sins, but I would have him to understand that I most thoroughly disapprove of it. The Bible teaches us to forgive wrongdoers as Christ forgave us; and this carried out will not lead to the covering up of sin. How does Christ forgive us? Only when we repent. Repentance is laid down as the first condition in order to salvation. There can be no forgivenes without it. Christ plainly gives us to understand that he disapproves of our sins, that we must forsake them if we would live with him.

In repentance very much is included. It means something more than sorrow for past sins; it includes, also, a desire to be forgiven, and a determination to sin no more. These are the necessary consequences of godly sorrow, and no true repentance will lack these elements.

When one of our fellows ever commits a sin, we are not instructed by the Bible to hasten to him and offer him forgiveness regardless of whether he desires it or not. Christ does not press forgiveness upon us. We must go to him in prayer. I do not think any Christian ever felt that Christ had fully forgiven their sins until they had first gone to him in prayer and requested it. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." (John 5: 40.) So the wrong doer is to come. The very act on his part will be a proof of heartfelt repentance. He must repent, and if he truly repent will form a determination to sin no more. When he does so then and not till then is it our duty to forgive him. Are we to spare his feelings; are we to make repentance easy by offering forgiveness in advance? The humiliation he may feel in confessing his wrong is but the punishment of a violated conscience which God himself created. If the church will proceed upon this plan instead of that of covering, its fame would be far fairer. Are we bound to keep silent about a person's sins? If he truly repents and we think we can trust him in the future most assuredly we can. And in no case are we at liberty to parade a person's failings or misdemeanors, unless we think by keeping silent honest people may be deceived and ensnared by them. If we know of a lion in the way it is our duty to tell our fellow men about it. If we will only follow out the simple golden rule in this respect, as well as in all respects, and not be prejudiced in favor of revealing or divulging a person's wrong deeds, all will be well. Let us indulge in true Bible, moral, sensible ideas of charity in all our walk of life, and live up to it, not covering sin, but rebuking it without regard to persons, and we shall be honored for our course.

Regeneration.

The doctrine of regeneration as taught in the gospel is to me a glorious theme. There is such harmony between the natural and the spiritual. By generation we are the natural children of the first Adam: by regeneration we are the spiritual children of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. To generate is to beget and bring forth. To regenerate is to rebeget and be born again. The first gives us a natural existence, and is birth of the flesh. The second gives us a spiritual existence, and is a spirit birth. In natural generation the child exists in its immature, begotten state, and is dependent on another for its present and future life. It lives because its parent lives. When born it has life in itself. In regeneration we are begotten again. (1 Pet. 1: 3.) "Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth. (Jas. 1: 17.) And in our begotten state we are the unmatured sons of God. "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." "And it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 Jno. 3: 1–2.)

In this rebegotten state we are dependent upon another, that is Christ, for present spiritual and our future life. As the branch draws its nourishment from the vine, and lives because the vine lives, so, said our Savior, "because I live ye shall live also." "Our life is hid with Christ in God. When he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Being born again we shall have life in ourselves, independent, immortal life. "Neither can they die any more; for they are as the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

The first birth gives us a natural body, the second, or birth of the Spirit, gives us a spiritual body. "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." First the natural, afterward the spiritual body, by the resurrection. (1 Cor. 15: 44–54.) Let us here apply the Savior's figure, "The wind bloweth where it listeth; thou hearest the sound thereof, but can'st tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Did you ever see a converted person to whom that figure could apply? But, say you, it means that the Spirit cometh and goeth as the wind. But why twist it to mean what it does not say? Would it not be far better for us to twist our theories to suit the word? It reads—"So is every one (not his spirit) that is born of the Spirit." If this figure could not be literally applied to the new birth or resurrection state, then there would be some reason for saying it means what it does not read. Our Savior was the first born from the dead (Col. 1: 18), and was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Christ is the first fruits of the resurrection. His rising again, is a pledge and sample of the resurrection of all the children of God. If we apply the figure to Christ, it is complete. When he was known of the two disciples at Emmaus in breaking of bread, he vanished out of their sight. He appeared in their midst when the doors were shut, and the disciples were afraid, and supposed him a ghost: but he said, "It is I, be not afraid. A ghost has not flesh and bones as ye see me have." We are to be as angels, being the children of the resurrection. Angels appear and go away, and who can tell whence they come or whither they go?

With this view of the regeneration we are not at loss to know when it begins and where it ends. It begins at conversion. It is then we are begotten by the word of truth. We exist in our begotten state, dependent upon Christ our life until the resurrection, or its equivalent, a translation, when regeneration will be complete. That will be the time of Zion's travail, and "a nation shall be born at once."

The Scriptures reveal two Adams, two covenants, two begettings, two births, two Jerusalems, a Paradise lost and Paradise restored. The Paradise lost is inherited by the generated family of the first Adam. Paradise restored or the new earth will be inherited by a regenerated family, out of the first Adam's lost posterity, and Christ at the head, the everlasting Father, or as the Douay Bible reads, "The Father of the Everlasting Age." We are sons of God now by adoption in the gospel; "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his own mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." Mark! The washing or baptism is not the regeneration, but is necessary to regeneration: "for if we have been planted (baptised) together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Tit. 3: 5; Rom. 6: 3-5.) And Jesus said unto them, "verily I say unto you that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that has forsaken houses or brethren or sisters or father or mother or wife or children or lands for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

Then regeneration will be complete. The kingdom will be "under the whole heavens," and the holy ones born of the Spirit will enter and inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. Glorious day! May it soon come. Amen.

Resurrection and Judgment.

Although the word of God declares "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both the just and the unjust;" and that "the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation;" and that "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ," yet, notwithstanding all this, there are those who gravely inform us that there is not a single passage in all the Bible that declares the wicked dead are to be raised to life!

They tell us the righteous come forth unto the resurrection of life, but the wicked simply come forth to damnation, or condemnation, i. e., they "come forth" to be condemned to remain dead and not come forth at all!! The coming forth is not a literal coming forth from the graves, they inform us; but they merely come forth in the mind of the Judge, who accounts them unworthy of life, and hence, leaves them under the dominion of death eternally, which constitutes their punishment. If such a theory only had some grains of the extract of common sense mixed with it, it would appear more plausible.

Supposing the Bible does not say the wicked dead are raised to life, it says they shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and I would ask my non-resurrection friend if he is orthodox enough to believe dead men can hear?

Again: Christ said to the wicked Jews that rejected him, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out." (Lk. 13: 28.) And to the high priest, who asked him if he was the Christ, the Son of the Blessed, he said, "I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." (Mk. 14: 62; Mat. 26: 64.)

A theory that will explain away such statements of inspiratian as the above, will explain away any thing Jehovah may say; and no wonder many are made skeptical by such men claiming to believe the Bible.

Again: Daniel informs us that many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake: some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting contempt." If the wicked dead, now sleeping in the dust of the earth, are going to awake, and hear the voice of the Son of God, and see him come on the clouds of heaven, how much will they lack being alive?—What more can be done to them to make them alive? And if they can perform those functions and yet remain dead, why not let the righteous remain dead, also, and deny the resurrection of both classes, as well. For if "hearing" does not mean "hearing, and "coming forth," does not mean "coming forth," then "life" does not mean "life," in the same connection; and John 5: 28, 29 does not teach a resurrection of any one: and if that passage does not teach a resurrection, there is not a text in the Bible that does.

Job informs us that the wicked "live, become old, yea, are mighty in power....their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them....they spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave." Yet, "his eyes SHALL SEE his destruction, he shall drink the wrath of the Almighty." How is this? Why; "Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens, that the wicked are reserved to the day of destruction, THEY SHALL BE BROUGHT FORTH TO THE DAY OF WRATH?" What for? says the objector. That "their eyes may see destruction, and that they may drink the wrath of the Almighty," I reply; which could not be unless they did come forth.

"Oh! what an unjust being—what a tyrant God is, if that is so," says one. Who is the best qualified to judge the principles of right and justice—the Almighty, or puny man?

"The great day of his wrath" comes when "the heavens depart as a scroll," and then the wicked are to come forth to see their destruction, and drink the wrath of the Almighty!

Christ is coming with myriads of the holy angels, to "execute judgment upon all, and to CONVINCE all the ungodly, of their ungodly deeds, etc. They will then be convinced of the justice of God in their being brought to judgment, and destroyed, however much some fail to be convinced of it now.

General Meetings.

When large meetings are to be held, either annual conferences, quarterly meetings, or others, of day's continuance, those who attend from abroad, should take pains not to hinder the precious work they profess to help carry on, by a lack of preparation. How often it is the case that good and earnest brethren spoil the peace of a meeting by an untimely presentation of some "new thought," some "hobby," or some strange view. It is greatly out of place for a brother to rise in a social meeting where all hearts beat high with hope and the love of Jesus, and begin to descant upon the idea of a "self existent devil!" He consumes time that could be used to better purpose, and creates discomfort in the church, and, by his "gift of continuance," keeps adding to the stream that quenches the fire so many earnest ones had united to kindle. I have known instances where churches have been made to say, "we don't want any more general meetings in our place if we must be annoyed with such speeches."

Sometimes, too, preachers (who ought to understand appropriateness) are so exceeding inapt in their choice of subjects, and become so vehement in the presentation of their "whale" sermon, that instead of adding to the spirit of devotion, they are "death in the pot;" and some Elisha, or other noble soul, must find an antidote or all is lost. Appropriateness is a jewel.

What is needed. When we contemplate attending a quarterly, or general meetings, in order to be prepared to do good, we should lay aside every thought that would deter us from participating in the devotional exercises of the meeting. Self must be crucified. All desire to have the honors, must be laid aside, and naught but the pure spirit of Jesus allowed to dwell in your hearts. Controversy is very rarely devotional—unless it be devotion to self, or theory. It is very seldom that controversy is the great principle of truth arrayed against error; but rather one man arrayed against another. Then controversy is to be avoided at our general meetings. If it becomes necessary that a particular question be discussed in a public assembly, let a time be appointed especially for that purpose.

It is necessary that we cultivate the spirit of unity. We need to be kind and obliging, as well as prayerful and devout. Let us henceforth endeavor to be a help to each other by having our own hearts so aglow with love to Jesus that all who come in contact with us will be made to feel that we are Jesus' disciples. When we are preparing to attend such meetings, we ought to anticipate a good time in the name of the Lord. Pray for it. Wait for it. Keep your mind on it intently, and God will be pleased to favor you with his special presence, and victory will crown the mutual effort.

To be most useful, should be our aim. If we would edify and bless those to whom we are sent by the Home-arranging committee, or if we would be of real service to the friends who invite us to share their hospitality we must have the spirit of the Master with us. I will not attempt to give a special rule, but, as I once said in answer to the question: "Is it right to take timber off speculators' lands, when your own improvements enhance the value of them as much as the removal of the timber does damage?" I answered: Does the Spirit of Jesus go with you to get the wood? A long silence followed, but, suffice it to say, that member of the church took no more wood.

I once sat among the elders at a certain place where all seemed merry, and all seemed to join in sportive sayings relative to past incidents, thinking no ill to any one, when all at once I saw that our conversation was a source of great grief to a sister whose hospitality we shared. We cannot tell how deep the wound may be, which our lack of obedience to this gospel rule—"be sober," may make. Then "be sober putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for a helmet the hope of salvation," that our meeting together may not be for the worse, but for the better.

How great a pity that we should not feel for what end we are born into this world, till just as we are leaving it!—Walsingham.

PART FIRST.

I have seen something!

What have you seen?

A pile of dirt.

Well, that is common enough: what else did you see?

A man washing and sifting it.

What did he get out of it?

Some shining dust.

What did he do with it?

Melted it in a crucible and poured it into a mould.

With what result?

A beautiful gold coin enstamped with his own image and likeness.

A pretty thing indeed, to come out of a pile of dirt! What did he do with it?

He gave it to me to keep for the present, with the promise that it shall be mine by and by.

PART SECOND.

I have something else to tell you.

Well, let's hear it.

The man asked me for the coin.

Did you give it to him?

Yes; it was his right to claim it.

True; but what did he do with it?

He dissolved it—turned it into liquid form.

Then your coin is gone!

Oh! I shall get it again.

On what does your hope of regaining it rest?

On his promise.

Good. What else did he do?

Mixed the liquid with clay, and formed the mass into a globe.

Worse and worse! What hope can you now have of getting it back?

The hope that he that gathered it from the dirt in the first place, will now be able to re-collect it from the globe of clay.

PART THIRD.

Joy, joy! I have something more to tell you.

What is it?

I have my coin more bright and beautiful than ever!

Good: then your confidence in the chemist was not misplaced—he has proved true to his word.

Yes! I shall always believe him after this.

PART FOURTH.

Of what did God make man?

"Of the dust of the ground."

In whose image and likeness?

"In the image of God he created him."

Could God dissolve the man thus made?

"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Has the Creator promised to bring him to life again?

"I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death."

Many in these days deny the literal resurrection of the dead partly on the ground that the body decomposes, mingling with the dust, enriches vegetation, is thus eaten by the beast, who in turn furnishes food for man, and so on through numberless changes until identity is completely lost. It must however be admitted, that not a particle of matter can be lost; and if the chemist can do such wonders with his handful of shining dust, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible, that GOD should raise the dead?"

Our Pulpit.

Sermon.

BY J. R. PRESTON.

"Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." (Tit. 2: 13.)

That which is out of sight, or lost, or that which we expect to come to us, we look for.

Our Savior is out of sight now, filling his priestly office in the holy place, making intercession for us. The types of the Mosaic arrangement teach us—being a shadow of good things to come—that our High Priest will return when his ministrations in the holy place are finished, to bless us forever. Without his return he is lost to all who have hoped in him; and they, knowing this, and having all their treasures of life stored in him, profess to be forever undone unless he comes again. But they are not left to guess whether he will or will not come, for he has said: "If I go away I will come again." Believing this, though he is lost from our sight, still we expect his return. He will come personally. If we have an absent friend, and are told that he will return, we look for that friend to come back to us as personally or really as he left us. So it is with Jesus. HE will return. Paul says: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." (1 Thes. 4: 16.) The angels said: "This same Jesus....shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1: 11.)

CHRIST IS OUR HOPE.

We are begotten into a lively hope by the resurrection from the dead. Without Christ there would be no resurrection. Paul bases his whole argument favoring the resurrection of the dead upon the fact that Christ was raised from the dead. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." (Jno. 11: 25.) By him the work of resurrection will be executed. Our life is in him, for he is our life. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." Then all who wait for Jesus to come, and love his appearing, are looking for that blessed hope;" and when that hope is realized, it is life, riches, and honor. A hope which embraces in its expectation all the realities of the world to come, is indeed a blessed hope.

THE GLORIOUS APPEARING.

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." (Mat. 25: 31.) Jesus having overcome his foes, is exalted to the throne of his Father, where he sits as a "priest upon his throne;" and has obtained the right to say: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3: 21.) Jesus is to have a kingdom, and in that kingdom he will appear in his glory. To his church, his bride, he says: "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed me." (Lk. 22: 29.) Amid the shining glory of his everlasting kingdom all earthly splendor will be lost sight of.

The time is very near at hand when Jesus is to sit upon his own throne. When he comes to take possession of the earth, his Father presents him with a celestial capital: "the holy city, New Jerusalem."

His errand to earth, and the establishment of his kingdom, are exhibitions of his wondrous love. All arranged for mortal man, immortalized, to enjoy. The glory in prospect is presented to induce men to prepare for a home in that sinless kingdom. The overcomers will be welcome to that rest where pilgrims find eternal delight.

Then, as the time is near, we wait the signal trumpet. All is ready. "The heaven departs as a scroll," and the majestic train appears. A shout, such as mortals never heard, will awaken the dead ones, while the living saints feel a new and immortal life moving them upward to join the heavenly train. The voice of the archangel and the trump of God blend with that joyous shout and add sublimity to the scene. As we contemplate the glory of that coming our hearts gush out with a hearty amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

Brethren: are we ready for this glorious coming? and the realization of all our hopes? If not, awake! for the Bridegroom is at hand.

Advent Christian Times.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 28, 1871.

OUR readers should remember that Mr. Constable's masterly work, with the introduction and notes by Prof. Ives, can be obtained for only FORTY CENTS. Many will read it who would not read an Advent book, though it teaches just what Adventists believe. Send fo a copy, and keep it in circulation.

SOME are becoming interested in the study of prophecy, who have not as clear views of the subject as we could wish. See the interesting article upon "Prophecy and the Church of Rome," which we give elsewhere. We are nearer the end than the writer thinks: the signs he mentions are tokens of deliverance close by, and not of a century of preparation for the end.

IT looks now as if the Mormon fanaticism, which sometime ago passed its ripeness and became rotten, is in a fair way at length to be shaken off. The foul and unnatural anachronism and excrescence in modern society, exposed to the light, cannot much longer keep its putrescence from dissolution. But it is worthy of notice, that this, and nearly all the other thousand and one fanatical schisms which have so marred the history of Christianity, and caricatured its teachings, have sprung from mistaken interpretations of the prophecies relating to the Second Coming of Christ, showing that a thoroughly consistent clearing up of that difficult subject would be of unspeakable importance.—Advance.

—Exactly—most heresies have sprung from immaterialism, or from spiritualizing the second advent. The orthodox church set the example· the Mormons followed, going further on the same road; that is all. Throw spiritualizing interpretation and immaterialism overboard, and most of the so-called difficulties disappear.

PROF. Bartlett is awake on "the annihilation theory" again. We offered him the pages of the Quarterly, or the columns of THE TIMES for a review of, or a debate with Mr. Constable, in order that his arguments might reach those he considered as in error, as far as possible. But no, he respectfully declined, and referred the public to his book. Now, however, he has come out with a review of Mr. Constable in the New Englander—a quarterly very few 'annihilationists' are likely to see. His object, undoubtedly is not to convert us, but to, so far as possible, prejudice the minds of those who still cling to orthodoxy, and so hold them there. We have not, however, seen his review. As soon as we can obtain it, our readers will hear more concerning it. We shall also send a copy to Mr. Constable, and tender the use of our columns for an extinguishing reply, such as Mr. Constable is fully capable of giving.

OUR ANNUAL MEETING.

It will be remembered that this is primarily a business meeting. We want our business men, men who love to do business for the Lord to be present, that we may have their counsel and advice upon questions of perhaps vital moment to our cause in the West.

We also wish our ministers to be present. They are better acquainted with the wants of the people than any others can be. Let all who can of these classes come.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The church in Chicago will do all they can to entertain those who come. But in order to render the burden as light as possible for them, it has been decided that those in attendance should get a portion of their meals at some public house. The friends in Chicago will furnish lodging and breakfast to their guests; who will provide their own dinners and suppers. We shall make arrangements so that this can be done at an expense of about fifty cents a day—a sum much less than would be entailed by extra traveling expenses, were we to meet at any other point than Chicago.

Let this be understood: the church at Chicago cannot provide for us at this time in any other way than this. Let us all go to see them, and to attend to our own high duties; and at the same time help and encourage the society there.

There will probably be preaching every evening and most of the afternoons.

Prophecy and the Church of Rome.

The progress and consummation of history begin to unroll themselves with startling vividness in the prophecies of Daniel. In the vision of the king, which Daniel interpreted, there appeared an image composed of four different substances; and in the vision of Daniel there appeared four beasts, different from each other. These different substances, and different beasts, the prophet says himself, represent four great empires, which were to continue in succession until the coming again of the Messiah. According to almost universal agreement, the first existed in the time of Daniel as the Babylonian empires; the second was the Medo-Persian; the third the Greco-Macedonian; the fourth, the Roman.

The fourth beast in the vision of Daniel re-appears in the revelation of St. John, under circumstances which render it certain that it refers to some form of the Roman empire. The beast of the revelation is said to have seven heads; and the seven heads are said to be seven mountains; and the woman carried by the beast, and upon whose forehead is written, "The mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," is expressly declared to be "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." The only city of which that was true, in the time of St. John, was the city of universal dominion, the city of Rome.

There are many points, both in Daniel and the Revelation, which afford wonderful confirmation to this view, but we will not stop to consider them. There is only one point in this connection which requires explanation. The fourth empire, that is the Roman, is to continue, according to these prophecies, until the second coming of Christ. It may be said that the Roman empire has long since passed away. But notice how wonderful is the peculiarity of this prophecy. The fourth empire is to be divided into ten kingdoms, and yet is in some sense to continue. The beast representing the Roman empire has ten horns, which St. John says are ten kings; and then he describes the beast itself as continuing in one sense, and not continuing in another. He decribes it as the beast that was, and is not, yet is. Now at the breaking up of the old Roman empire itself, in some form, has constantly reappeared. Charlemagne revived the empire. The emperor of Germany claimed imperial sway by virtue of his succession from the Cæsars. The emperor of Austria is the Kaiser, or Cæsar. The emperor of Russia is the Cæsar, or Czar. The present imperial government of France claims to be the reproduction of imperial Rome; and the papacy is one most significant form in which the Roman empire is perpetuated.

This Roman empire then, in one sense overthrown, and in another still existing, is to continue until the second coming of Christ.

But we are now in a position to understand certain prophecies which are made clear only in their fulfillment. One of these is that the form of this empire which is to have the persecution of God's people, is to continue twelve hundred and sixty years. After that, there are certain events which rapidly prepare, but how rapidly none can tell, the coming of Christ. Now this period of twelve hundred and sixty years, the termination of which coincides with the termination of Daniel's prophetic period, is certainly ended, or very near its end. The ecclesiastical form of the Roman empire has had the power of persecution not far from 1260 years. That power is vanishing in the shadow of civil authority, which is now all that exists even in the papal states, and in the establishment of religious toleration even in countries like Mexico.

We are living, apparently, in the period of the consummation of the prophecy. But this period is to be characterised by a remarkable development, and that is the revival, at the very time of its extremity of the power of the beast, or of the Roman sway. Prophecy tells us, that there will be, just at this juncture, and before the coming of Christ, a great falling away—and that vast multitudes of the professed followers of Christ shall come under the beast. We are living in the very midst of this. On every hand the mark of the beast is seen on men's foreheads. Thousands, too little spiritual for the spiritual worship of God are seduced by the sensuous worship which derives its inspiration from the mother of harlots that sits on the seven hills. The angel of the Revelation, to whom is confided the preaching of the everlasting gospel, says, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is coming." And another angel says, "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of indignation: and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name."

This is terrible, but it is the Spirit of God which indites it; and it becomes us living just at this crisis in history, to inquire earnestly what it means. St. John tells us that the woman on the beast signified the city that then ruled over the kingdoms of the earth. What city was that but Rome—and what is it now but Rome—and what is it now that principally represents us to the power of Rome—and what is the great falling away that is now going on—and what is that mark of the beast which excites the overpowering indignation of God—if it be not that influence which leads to conscious or careless dalliance with the Mother of Abominations?—Protestant Churchman.

The Past, Present, and Future.

Much has been said, is said, and most likely will be said concerning the name "Advent Christian." Although I have no hard feeling towards those who have "conscientious scruples," for not accepting the name "Adventists," yet I feel as if I should like to give my own experience in regard to this matter. Over two years ago I became a believer in the Advent doctrine, and decided with the help of the Lord to preach it. I was received into the Michigan Conference, and afterwards ordained. During our quarterly and annual meetings I became acquainted with some who rejected the name Advent. They complained of many things which it is not my aim to specify here. I received their teachings. I rejected the name, determined not to receive it. What was the consequence? I fretted, could find fault as much as any one, and felt as if every one in the Conference was trying to feel as big as they could, and make me appear as small as possible. In fact I used to feel bad every time I went to quarterly and annual meetings. This was my experience of the past.

Now for the present. After due deliberation and study I have decided that it is right and proper to accept the name "Advent Christian." I now can say that where once I was blind now I see. May God help us all to see things in their proper light. And what is my experience now? I find so much fault with myself, that it gives me no time to find fault in others, even if all their faults which I perceived in the past existed, which I now rather doubt. And I think that I shall enjoy the next quarterly meeting much better than I can imagine.

I have induced the Delta and Aurelius churches to adopt our name, and they seem to me like new churches. I hope that the Rives church will also show their faith by their name as well as by their works. This is my present experience.

My future course is plain to me. I shall, God being my helper, preach the truth, even "the faith once delivered unto the saints." I shall endeavor to show my faith by my name whether in public or private. I shall endeavor by every honest and fair means to oppose those who try to scatter the flock of God's "peculiar people." I shall try to build up "Advent Christian churches" wherever God shall call me to labor, and lastly with the help of the Lord I shall endeavor to show by my daily walk and conversation, that to be a genuine "Advent Christian" is to be "redeemed from all iniquity and zealous of good works."

This is my past and present experience, and these are my determinations for the future. May the honest opposers of the name "Advent" be brought to see their mistake, as I was, and give glory to God for the light. May the disorganizers be led to repentance through the Spirit of God.

ADDRESS.

To all of like precious faith in Arkansas, Greeting: Brethren and Sisters in Christ: The Lord has graciously opened our eyes to the fact of his soon coming in his kingdom. It has filled us with joy, and raised us out of the vanity, spirit, and fashion of the world, and led us to watchfulness and prayer. And now, instead of looking for the conversion of the world, we look for the personal coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, and the renewal of the earth. And as we look for these soon to come, what our hands find to do we mean to do with our might. And in order the more efficiently to carry on this work, we have organized ourselves into churches, and these into a State, and Quarterly Conferences. As many of the ministers and members of the popular churches are being cut off for the faith we hold, they will now have a home where they will find fellowship and help in the way to the kingdom; as well as help in their work for souls. And we invite all of like precious faith to come out of opposing organizations and help us to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord.

To our fellow-workers we would say, that our organization will be of no help to us, or the cause, unless we consecrate ourselves wholly to our Master's service, with the aid of the divine Spirit. We must labor incessantly, not only to bring men to God, but feed the flock of God with the "sincere milk of the word," and seek to train up a people in the love and fear of God. Let us organize churches wherever a door opens, and see that the ordinances are administered faithfully to the household of faith. Let us encourage the ministry, and hold up their hands. And also remember that the "laborer is worthy of his hire."

Let us be co-workers. "Keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." In this way we shall win others to Christ, and cheer one another.

Let us make our Quarterly Conferences efficient by faithful attendance and action. And let us pray that the Lord of the harvest will raise up laborers to gather in the harvest, "for the harvest is great, but the laborers are few."

The field is new and large. We are few in numbers, but God is with us, and we shall continue to prosper, and the truth will prevail. Let us not "despise the day of small things," or be discouraged by opposition. This work is of God, and will prevail. We are at the end of the dispensation, and we must go out into the highways and hedges and compel the people to come in to the feast of the Lord.

As a great help in our cause we commend the publications of the Western Advent Association, and especially THE ADVENT TIMES, printed at Buchanan, Mich. This paper not only advocates with ability the truth of the Advent faith, but gives us the signs of the times, and the evidences of the nearness of the kingdom. We want our families to take this paper for many reasons that we may not name here. But by it they will keep well posted on the progress of truth, and also have the appointments of the conferences, and preaching, and the reports of the cause all over the West, and the world.

And now brethren and sisters in Christ, let us all enter heartily into the work before us, and be faithful till Jesus comes to give us the "palm of victory, and crown of glory."

ANNUAL MEETING.

The A. C. Conference for the State of Ohio held its Annual Session with the church in Nevada, commencing Oct. 27, 1871, and continued over Sunday.

The preaching brethren belonging to the Conference were all present, and the different churches were represented by their delegates except one.

Eld. Jonas Wendall of New York was present and aided us in our deliberations and also in preaching the word. The reports of churches and ministers speak well for the work that is being done. Two churches are without a pastor, yet they keep up the ordinances and are as zealous as ever in the cause: but they are hungering after food. Eld. J. M. Judson has been laboring at his different points and with good results. His health is poor, but he expects to work till Jesus comes.

Eld. E. McCullock is pastor of the church at Nevada, but has labored at two other points. Since the last meeting he has baptised fifteen in different places. He has given all to the service of Christ, and expects soon to reap the reward in the world to come.

Eld. Jonas Wendall has preached considerably in the State, and is doing all he can for the cause. Eld. D. C. Jefferson is preaching some in Norwalk and Fairfield, and wherever the way opens is ready to work in the Master's vineyard.

Eld. G. W. Stetson being sick at this hour of the session was unable to report his labors, which have not been few. The subjoined written report of the delegates of the Nevada church, expresses the condition of the Conference generally: -The church in Nevada has a standing membership of eighty-six, including nine members added since our last session, and not merely members because their names are enrolled upon the church book, but real, unpretentious, and unassuming workers, that the Lord has sent into his vineyard to work to his glory and their own salvation. They are a people that are not ashamed to be called the children of God, and shrink not from defending and spreading abroad the faith once delivered to the saints.

In matters of public worship, we have a good attendance, and order and decorum that is commendable. During the period of our pastor's absence, we passed safely through a very severe trial—one of those trials that will try the sincerity of its members, and develop any hypocrisy that may exist. To accomplish this most desirable result, we not only maintained our church organization intact, but kept up in addition to our regular Wednesday eve. prayer meeting, a prayer and conference meeting on Sunday eve. with but one exception, which was caused by the icy hand of death entering the household of one of our number.

In coming together we renewed our spiritual strength, our covenant with God, and spoke cheering words of comfort to each other. We are therefore ready at all times to give every man that asks us a reason for the hope that is within us. The Lord led us safely through, without the loss of one; for which be thanks and everlasting praise to his name.

Our Sabbath School is second to none in interest and attendance, considering the population of our town and the prejudice existing against the faith we teach. Our average attendance for the six months, ending Sept. 30 was seventy-six. Previous to the absence of our pastor we had two large Bible classes of adult persons, and eight minor classes; and I do not remember of a single instance that there was not a good representation of each class. Our officers and teachers are men and women of good Christian character and influence, and in every case selected from among the members of our own church. We feel that we are doing a good work, and the impression that is inculcated in the minds of the young will be lasting, and be the means of eventually bringing a goodly number into the fold of Christ. The Lord is blessing us in our every effort to advance the cause and kingdom.

Our worthy pastor who has so diligently labored with and for us, deserves our highest commendation and praise for his eternal welfare, for his unceasing labor and for the spirit of love he has shown us in our trials as a church, and individually. May the Lord reward him better than we ever can.

As a church and individually, we return our heartfelt thanks to Br. G. W. Stetson, who has been laboring with us for the past week, and we hope to express our appreciation of his valuable services in a more substantial manner. May the Lord help, guide and direct him that he may in years to come magnify our Savior Jesus Christ, as he has in the past.

To visiting churches we extend the right hand of fellowship: and open our hearts and homes, and bid you hearty welcome.

To those in attendance who have different theological views from us, we say that we entertain a warm feeling for all that love the Savior and try to live in accordance with his divine will, and while we may differ in some points, yet in the main we agree that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, and that he came into the world, and suffered and died the ignominious death of the cross to save depraved and sinful humanity, and that his is the only name in heaven or among men whereby we can be saved.

To those who by their works and actions do not love the Savior, we ever welcome you here. We pray the Lord will open your hearts to his Spirit, and that it will do its office work of conviction, and convert you by the glory of his power, and that you may with us enter into his rest and receive the crown of immortality and eternal life.

To all we say, let our Annual Conference be characterized by the unity of spirit and oneness of mind, not contending as the manner of some is, but above all let us pray for more holiness of heart, and let all our deliberations magnify him who has called us, is our prayer, Amen.

This report, though hastily considered and written is respectfully submitted.

A. J. FLAUARTY, Chairman; GEO. BENEDICT, R. M. STEWART, A. J. FLAHARTY, Delegates.

The following address of the President was delivered in the evening, which he was requated by the Conference to prepare for publication.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ: Through the merciful watchcare of our Heavenly Father, we have been brought safely over the billowy coast of time to the close of our first Conference year, and as it is expected that I shall address you at this time upon the wants and good duties of this body, also upon the work it was designed to accomplish.

This Conference was organized for the purpose of spreading more effectually and widely the glorious truths of the Bible relative to the Second Coming of Jesus Christ to redeem his people from "under the curse of the law," and restore earth to its primitive beauty and glory, and fit it up for the everlasting abode of the redeemed church of God. To spread these with other Bible truths which pertain to this age and generation is the great work which this Conference designed to accomplish. The importance of this work can only be understood and felt when we realize that our eternal well-being depends upon our having a knowledge of the approaching events coming upon the earth which are intimately connected with the salvation and deliverance of God's people from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. It was emphatically necessary for God's ancient people to understand that they were living in close proximity to the time when God would send a flood of water upon the earth, and their salvation and deliverance depended wholly upon their having a knowledge of the event, and thereby making the necessary preparation to meet it.

It was necessary for Abraham and Lot to understand when God would destroy the devoted city with fire from heaven, that they his people might escape the terrible end which came upon those who knew not the time of God's visitation. And we inquire, will God change his manner of dealing with his church and people? We answer nay, verily. God has always acted upon this principle, and to admit that there will be any change in this respect would bring a reproach upon the character of God. Hence, if this principle be correct, we can see the importance of the work before us, in warning a godless world of its certain doom. God has been speaking to us not only in his word, but by signs and wonders in the earth, with unerring certainty that the end of all earthly things is at hand, and the ushering in of the eternal day of glory, and the everlasting reign of the Prince of Peace is about to be established. And the [illegible] of the church of God is, Oh! hasten thy coming! Bring the long expected day, of glory and deliverance, and dry the tears of weeping saints! O Lion of the tribe of Judah, bring forth from thy bridal chamber the royal robes, and bedeck thy weeping church with immortality. Oh! come and wake from their long slumbers thy church, sleeping in their dusty beds, and gather thy jewels in thine everlasting embrace. Call O thou Mighty One, and thy church will answer thee.

Our work for the past year has not been in vain in the Lord. We have been reaching out into new fields, and the cry is and has been, Come over and help us; and although we have not been able to do all that we could desire, yet we feel that we have been blest in what we have done, and as the fruit of our labor some will be gathered as jewels in the day of our Master's return to earth. But we need to put forth an extra effort in publishing this last message and dispensational truth to the world. The importance of this message which we feel commissioned of God to deliver to a godless world and a sleeping church, demands it. God demands that we work with our might while the day lasts. The future well-being of many who have never heard the glorious proclamation of soon coming glory, demands it: and shall we withhold it from them. I think I can hear the answer, No. Let us put forth our united efforts in the great work of sounding the alarm to those who are about to perish, and, if possible, win for our Master a glorious Bride, who shall be clad in white robes. Let us push out this last life boat, and fear not to utter the thrilling cry "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" The night is very dark, and earth's final storm is at hand. Let us make one more effort to get nearer the throne. Our hope speaks not only for ourselves, but for the unnumbered millions of God's sleeping saints, and gives the blessed assurance that they will soon break their slumbers, and with all God's people live forever in the Paradise of God.

Let us open our eyes to comprehend the magnitude of our work, and the responsibility of the position we occupy. Let us be willing to make every sacrifice which the importance of the cause demands, even to the appropriating of our means to help push forward the car of salvation. We need men of God to carry forward this glorious work. Shall we have them. My heart thrills while I anticipate your answer in the affirmation. May God give us grace, and strength to carry it forward to victory and to eternal life. God's messengers must be supported, their families must of necessity have bread; will you give it to them. Will you support them while they deliver the last warning note of mercy to the perishing race. The work is great and must be done. It will admit no delay. It is important, and shall we falter, while the evening shades of earth's final gloom are fast gathering around us?

Oh, let us gird ourselves anew for the final conflict. Let us combine our efforts and our means to carry forward this great and important work, and God will crown our labors with his blessing. Let us lose no time, but go to work like men of God armed with the panoply of heaven, and we shall very soon hear the "Well done!" and enter into the joy of our Lord and forever at rest.

The officers of last year were re-elected and we adjourned to the call of the President.

Sunday at 10 30 a. m. preaching by Eld. Jonas Wendell. Subject, "The Time of the End." At two p. m. by Eld. F. McCullock, on the preparation of heart necessary to meet the time of the end. In the evening by Eld. G. W. Stetson, on atonement and redemption, after which over one hundred partook of the Lord's supper.

Russia Arming.

Russia is said to be arming herself swiftly and powerfully at every point. Immense supplies of machinery, steam boilers and wire rigging have been sent to the Southern ports. Cronstadt is being strengthened, and engineers are laying out new lines of defense in various quarters. Meanwhile the regiments of the line are at work in competitive rifle shooting, the cavalry and artillery are being remodelled on improved principles, and all these things are being pushed with the utmost despatch. Can it be that Russia doubts the good faith of Prussia, or is it that she dreads her power? That one or both these suppositions is true there can be little doubt. It is said that a profound dread of a fresh uprising in Poland, an universal insurrection, devised and prompted by German publicists and backed by German bayonets, is the true secret of all these formidable preparations. The explanation is plausible as regards the Western frontier, but scarcely accounts for the vast operations in progress on the Black Sea.

It is not to be denied that the relative position of Russia in Europe is seriously modified by late events—events that have placed the control of more than a million and a half of splendid soldiers, flushed with victory, at the uncontrolled disposition of a single power, and almost of a single will. At the same time it suggests but a sad prospect for the people, this bristling into warlike panoply of one great military power in the East the moment the great military power of the West has been struck down. There is nothing, it would seem, but fighting, or preparing to fight, and the accumulation of huge debts, that labor at last is called on to pay, to be looked for while present dynasties subsist and confront each other. Time will show what is to come of the Czar's gigantic preparations, but at present they have every indication of being forerunners of a conflict beside which the Crimean war will seem comparatively trivial, and which may have a greater effect on the future of Europe than even the dreadful contest the thunder of which has only just passed away.—*N. EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We understand that a person by the name of "Smart" is passing himself off in Eastern Michigan as an Advent preacher. There is no preacher among us in good standing of that name. Don't be imposed upon.——There are rumors of two new papers, one in the East and one in the West; the former to be devoted chiefly to the question of prophetic time, the latter to be published by the advocates of "the name question;" those who repudiate the name "Adventist," and think Christian the only name the follower of Christ may wear. There are intimations of other publishing enterprises. We wish them all unbounded success so far as they can accomplish any real good. The field is wide, and possibly the best way to occupy is to scatter our strength.——Br. E. H. Burington has removed to Genoa, Ill., and taken charge of the church there. That will be his P. O. address till further notice.——A Nashville (Tenn.) new correspondent says: "I do think the time has come when the creeds should be set aside, and the word of God taken for what it says, and not what it is supposed to mean." Quite a good many are getting in that way of thinking.——Eld. J. A. Libby is the traveling agent for the "Maine Mission" in the Northern and Western part of the State. Also for THE TIMES, wherever he goes.——A Prof. Fowler has been lecturing in San Francisco on "The immortality of the soul demonstrated from the nature of man!"—a decidedly funny proposition.——"W. " " " The rumors regarding the health and sanity of Queen Victoria appears to have been thrown out as a kind of preparation for her majesty's resignation in favor of her son, which it is said the ministry are urging upon her. The Queen is naturally much displeased, but the pressure brought to bear upon her will probably accomplish the end. A family council was held at which the Duke of Cambridge stated plainly that the Prince of Wales must have something provided for him to do, and that he ought to transact nearly all the business which now falls upon his mother. The proposal which the Queen rejected is now modified so as to make the Prince of Wales regent, and the cabinet have entrusted to Mr. Foster the charge of this delicate negotiation with the sovereign at Balmoral. This statement if correct, explains the reason why ministers have been alternately expatiating on the great amount of labor the Queen has to perform, and on her "mental and physical" incompetency to the discharge of her duties. It has long been evident that the Queen is too old and too sober to suit the young aristocracy of England, and the fast young man who succeeds her will give an impulse to balls, fashions and high life generally which will improve trade and scatter abroad money faster than it can be done under his mother.—*Am. The casualties in which these losses occurred numbered but 1,502, as the cases of collision involved two or more vessels in one calamity. Of the total ships lost, 1,552 belonged to Great Britain and its dependencies, and 271 to foreign countries. Of the remaining 42, the nationality is unknown. EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Arkansas—Getting the Mail—An Unfaithful Postmistress.—Get your paper—Last Ride in the Saddle.—The Character of the people—The Publicans, Sinners, Pharisees and Scribes. The Farewell.—Fort Smith Letter.—A Methodist Sermon.—An Advent Sermon.—Questions.—Augusta.—No Opening.—Arrival in Memphis.

Friday, Nov. 3. On my arrival at Batesville I got my mail, letters, papers, some of the latter three weeks old, but all fresh to me, just in from the wilds. It was "like cool water to a thirsty soul." I learn here how to sympathize with our subscribers, who do not get their papers, sometimes for a month. And those who value them (and most do), feel a sadness when they have to return [illegible] ll the way from five, to fift[illegible]es without their Times, that t[illegible]ave been waiting for from one or two or more weeks. But Adventists do not fret or scold about it, but keep their peace and have the better time reading when it does come.

There is much irregularity about the mails in this region. And I have been looking into the matter to see if there is any remedy for it. I find one cause of the irregularity is the delay of the steamboats by fog and accidents, or grounding on the bars in low water. These things cannot well be avoided. I also learn that the mail matter is detained in some offices, for a time when it is needless, and a thing that can be avoided. The postmasters with whom I have had interviews, are determined to have this abuse corrected. So we shall have some help in a way of speedy conveyance.

A word to our subscribers. Please remember that where there is more than one copy of The Times coming to your post office, if any one gets a copy all the copies are there. And if the post master tells you there is none, tell him he may be mistaken; for if one comes, all come, and your neighbor has got his. Make a stir, and tell him to hand over your Times!

I have looked into this matter. At one office, where three of our subscribers had said to me, that after repeated calls for the paper, being told there was none for them, I went and told the post mistress that I wanted the back papers of such and such subscribers to The Times. First she said she had no time to look them up. I went again and finally got some dozen back numbers, which had been in the office all the time. Let our subscribers be particular. Be kind, but persistent, and you will always get them, at least in nine cases out of ten.

You take the paper to read. You want it regularly. This gives it its interest, to keep up the weekly social feast. If it is interrupted, the interest is broken, more or less. Get it, and read it regularly and feel that you cannot do without it, and then you will have the good of it.

This p. m. I took my last ride for the present in the saddle, some nine miles to Br. Rosebraugh's, to return my Choctaw pony, which I rode in my Red River tour the last few weeks. A fine little fellow, I felt loth to part with him. But my work here is done. I have now been six weeks in the saddle, with "Old Rock" and the pony, riding every day, over mountains and through valleys, in storm and sunshine, preaching almost every day in the log houses in this wild country of Arkansas. I have enjoyed the best of health, and good cheer of mind, and best of all, I have had the presence of God, and his blessing in these labors among the poor who were famishing for the word of life. I never expect to be happier, or to do more good, in the same amount of time, than has been accomplished in this tour. A more kind and grateful people I never saw. While not refined in a worldly sense, they possess some of the finest features of "nature's noblemen." Without the gew-gaws of fashionable society, their dress, and equipage is more in accordance with the simplicity of Christ. General neatness, wholesome, plain food, and a thousand welcomes made me feel quite at home in all my visits with them. In my own observations it seemed to me that with one or two exceptions, "everybody was kind to every-body."

It is among such a people as this I have organized churches, and a State Conference, that are destined to live and prosper while they wait and watch for the coming of the Lord. I have to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" My visit has been a daily surprise to me. It has revealed some things to cheer me on in the setting of every sun. And in the last five days of my labor, while with Elds. Lenox and Crosby, in the Red River District, I enjoyed a full cup. They came out so manly, so heroically, so boldly, and yet in such sweet Christian meekness and love, I did not know how to get away from them, and the hosts of their friends who will not leave them in this hour of trial, and at the same time of joy. I could not get away without a promise to return. I have already spoken of these brethren as having gifts and grace for good service in the cause.

Saturday, Nov. 4. And now I am soon to part with Br. Rosebraugh and friends in the Batesville District. He and his household have been very kind, and left nothing undone to help me in my work. His oldest son, the Doctor, now at home on a visit, took me to Batesville in his carriage. On the way, speaking of the health of the neighborhood in which his father lives, he told me there had not been a death for seventeen years! These hills and mountains with their salubrious atmosphere, afford the best health, with fewer objections for a wild country than is found in Kansas, or Colorado.

Sabbath, Nov. 5. Gave three discourses in the Court House, and closed my labors here. I illustrated the vision of Dan. chs. 2 and 7, and spoke on the kingdom of God, and the signs of its approach, giving them a clear view of the matter. The interest was very great and I hope for good fruit.

It may be remarked that all the "publicans and sinners," were out to hear me and listened candidly. Most of this class had not been to church for many years. One of the oldest and wealthiest citizens invited Br. R. and myself to dine with him. We had an interesting conversation on the subject of religion. He said that he had not been to church for twenty years, till I came. And on hearing my first discourse he had followed me closely, and was convinced of the truth. But said he, I am yet a lost sinner. I expressed the hope that he would not remain so long. It is remarkable that so many persons who are regarded by the church as "publicans and sinners," have given more attention to the truth than the "Scribes and Pharisees;" and though these outcast ones may be despised now, it may be that they will enter the kingdom of God before the others. I do pray that these men will break off from all sin, and follow Christ, and so be ready for his glorious coming. I enjoyed the hospitality of another of these gentleman the day before leaving Batesville, who expressed a strong desire to be a child of God. On parting we had prayer and a song at his fireside, which will not be forgotten.

Tuesday, Nov. 7. At an early hour I bade Br. Rosebraugh, Wycough and others adieu, and started for Jacksonport, on my way North. And here I must bear testimony to the kindness of the people of Batesville. From the first day that I came among them till the hour of leaving, I have had their respect and attendance at my meetings, with their hospitality. And I must again mention Br. Marcus Wycough, who gave me a home, and brotherly attention, with all his household. God reward them. Messrs. Fraly and Turner also, showed me kindness, though not professors, for whom I pray, that they may seek and obtain that blessed hope.

I was the only passenger in the stage, and had a chance for meditation during seven hours on the way to Jacksonport. The six weeks past seemed like a dream, but a very pleasant one. The field is but just entered, and calls are multiplying, yet duty calls me North. At this time I got the following letter, of Oct. 9, from Sr. D. C. Corwin, late of Washington, now in Fort Smith, Ark.

Br. Himes: I left the Chicago Advent Church July 17, with many regrets, and came to Fort Smith to make my home at least for the present. We are quite pleased with our location. Society is refined and intelligent, and we are made very welcome. But as to the present truth, Adventism, I suppose there was never a sermon preached upon that subject here. No one seems to know any thing about it, and of course are not set, or prejudiced against it. I am sowing the seed as best I can and watching The Times with longing eyes to see if any one of our ministers are coming this way. This is a good healthy country and a great chance to do good and get a living. Oh! that our Advent people would rise up literally and spiritually and come and possess the land. Facilities for getting here are becoming much better. Two days travel from St. Louis is all that it is called. Railroad from that city to Fort Gibson, sixty miles from us, up the Arkansas River, and from thence to this place by stage or boat. Who will come? Br. Himes, can't you come and be the first to break the ground? Yours in the blessed hope waiting for Jesus.

Next season, if all is well, Sr. Corwin will have help. Please meet us at Conference and Campmeeting in Flatt Woods, the last of August next year, and there we we will arrange for Fort Smith.

Wednesday, Nov. 8. Here I am waiting for stage or boat. We have had no mail here from the North for about two weeks. The river has now risen, and we shall have boats soon. I wait at Mrs. Wood's pleasant house, where she makes everybody feel at home.

At 3 p. m. a boat arrived, and will leave to-morrow. I tried to get a chapel, to speak to-night, but both are occupied, and the Court House is very small, and but few would be able to find accommodation. So at night I went to hear Mr. Young, of the M. E. Church, South. His text was in 1 Cor. 15 : 58—"Be ye steadfast and immovable," &c. He said there were three kinds of Christians, very good, doubtful, and very bad ones. The good ones were those who were "steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." These were, first, thoroughly converted to God; second, they were largely possessed of a knowledge of the word of God; third, thought much of Christ; fourth abounded in work; fifth, suffered patiently for Christ.

Their reward would be resurrection to immortality and eternal life. His illustrations of each point were rich and touching. And with the exception of some phrases and theological coloring given to the truth, it was an able and sensible sermon. I enjoyed it much. Mr. Young is one of the ablest ministers of the M. E. Church, South, and is stationed at Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. Young's remarks on the importance of sound conversions were good. Perhaps there is no greater evil with which the Methodists have to contend than superficial conversions. The proportion of their membership received on probation that fall away is very large, and has become a subject of deep anxiety. It is the same with the Disciples. One of their ministers in Arkansas lately referred to it in an address, showing that they had many more baptisms than Christians. It is an evil in all churches, and it is much to be deplored. The only evidence of sound conversion is a heart to work, and abound in the work of the Lord.

Mr. Young, in speaking on the point of "thinking much of Christ," illustrated the want of appreciation of his divinity by a reference to the Unitarians. He spoke of Edward Everett and Jared Sparks, who left the ministry for politics and letters, as an evidence of a want of love for and appreciation of the character of Christ. But how about Mr. Harlan in the U. S. Senate, and a hundred others in the M. E. Church, who are continually leaving the ministry for politics, letters, and secular callings? His illustration strikes home, and shows that a belief in the trinity is of no more protection than a belief in the unity of the Godhead. The proportion of Unitarian ministers who adhere for life to the ministry is larger than among the Methodists. And while a deep constraining love for Christ as "God manifest in the flesh," is a protection from temptation to leave the ministry, the trouble in all these cases is more in the men than in their creed. We want men whose minds are thoroughly in sympathy with Christ and the plan of salvation, baptised into the truth, and full of faith and the Holy Spirit. These will not forsake him in any church.

Thursday, Nov. 9. To-day I have had interviews with many of the citizens of Jacksonport, and conversed on questions of religion, which came up by inquiries made on the subject of Adventism. The people here know but little about it. The Methodists and Presbyterians are the two societies, and the people hear little else but their doctrines. I could not get access to either of the chapels, and everything seemed to work against my getting a hearing. However, I kept at work until I got a door fairly opened, Judge Baxter giving me the use of the Circuit Court Room for meeting to-night. I then got notices printed and scattered over the town, every one being a preacher, asking the reader, "Where do the dead go? Do they sleep in death? Heaven, hell; what and where?" This drew out a crowd of the best citizens. It being court week we had lawyers, judges, editors, and all classes, both Protestant and Catholic—men who think: and those that remained at home had the subject pressed upon their mind, as given in the notice.

The audience listened for an hour and three quarters with the closest attention. At the close an opportunity was given for questions. The usual queries came along. An elderly gentleman, and with a sanctimonious air, said, "I should like to know who the five brethren of the rich man were?" The next question was by a Catholic lawyer, Ed. W. Thompson, "Where did you get your Bible? What is your authority for your canon?" I did not know whether he was an infidel or Papist. And so I replied that we got it from the manuscripts which had been kept by the Jews and Christians. But I soon saw that he was a Romanist, and he referred to the fact that King James' version was given us by the English Parliament, and so the canon had no higher authority than the English Parliament; while the Catholic Bible, the Latin Vulgate, was given by St. Jerome and sustained by the Pope and Councils of the Papal church. I told him I would reply more at length in The Times.

But I would add here that the Douay Bible, which is given by Catholic authority, varies but little from King James' version on the subject that I had treated. They translate sheol in the Old Testament hell in sixty instances, and the forty scholars employed by King James having just emerged from the bosom of the Papal church, only translated sheol hell twenty-nine times out of the sixty-four instances of its occurrence—a very sensible improvement, especially in view of the fact that it means the grave every time.

There being no other questions, and the captain of the boat having waited for me now over an hour, I now closed and hastened my departure. On the boat, however, I met with gentlemen who heard the lecture, and prolonged the conversation till midnight.

Friday, Nov. 10. We are sailing down White River quietly. A number of cotton merchants are aboard. They think the cotton crop will be 3,500,000 bales this year, and is worth a third more than last season. This will greatly help the impoverished South.

We arrived just at midnight at Augusta, a flourishing town of a thousand inhabitants, some eighty miles by the river below Jacksonport. There is much trade here, and a rich country surrounding the town. They have Methodist and Presbyterian churches. I attended the M. E. church at night. A Mr. Craig preached from the confession of the prodigal son—"I have sinned." The speaker said that many had made the confession, and instanced Pharaoh, who, he said, was not sincere. And Saul, who went back from following the Lord. Achan, detected with the wedge of gold, confessed to no purpose, and Judas confessed, but despaired. He thought such confessions were like a death-bed repentance, which was in most instances of no worth. But the prodigal was sincere, and was accepted and saved. It was a healthful talk, though common place, and much in the type of preaching fifty years ago. "The immortal soul," "eternal wrath," "crying for a drop of water in hell," "eternal wo," were some of the phrases used by the speaker, with Methodist unction. It was easy to see that the man had never studied the Bible on the question of future punishment, or the government of God.

In the little time I had, I called upon several persons, among whom was the editor of the Chronicle. He is a gentleman, and gave me much information about the people and country. He thinks this region is the richest and finest in the State. I also saw Mr. Jones, a local elder of the M. E. church, South. He told me if I should be here to-morrow night I could have their house to speak in; but the boat only stopped a few hours, and I could not avail myself of the favor. There is an opening for the truth here.

Saturday, Nov. 11. We have a bright morning, and our boat has made good progress, so that we shall connect with the railroad at Duvall's Bluff for Memphis at noon. And so by stage, boat and rail I shall make a journey of three hundred miles in five days! But the time is not lost, as I have had a chance to work on the way.

I received the kindest attentions from the Master, Capt. Milt. R. Harvey, and the Clerk, J. McReynolds, of the Hartford, which hails from Evansville, Ind., and is now engaged on White River. She is a small, safe, and excellent craft.

At noon we took the cars for Memphis.

Iowa.

To the brethren of the Iowa A. C. Conference:

Dear Br'n: Br. J. V. Himes, according to the instruction of our Conference purchased a tent for us, and advanced money to pay for it, rather than to lose the excellent bargain. We now owe about $40 of that, which is needed very much.

Brethren, let us wipe that debt out immediately, and I am sure we will feel better for it. In the fore part of the season we plead hard times, and so it was: but let us remember our duty and attend to this at once, as you know it is needed. Let those that subscribed send the amount to me or to the office, and it will be credited to you. D. A. DICKINSON, Sec'y.

The following are the unpaid subscriptions:

J. Walrad	$10.00	J. Bodde	$30.00
A. G. Lewis	5.00	M. W. Kimball	3.00
J. [redacted]	5.00	J. Adair	5.00
N. J. Sade	3.00	R. Grover	3.00
Br. Woodard	3.00	W. Hitchcock	3.00

If these can all be paid soon it will be a great help.

Letter From San Francisco.

Prof. Ives' Introduction of Constable.—Mourning over lack of Revival Spirit.—A Suggested Cause for the Deadness of the Orthodox Churches.—The Proper Precedence of the Advent Church.—Dr. Scudder's Confession.—The Arkansas Mission.—The Terrible Alternative.

It occurs to me that it is worth while to mention that the author of the Introduction to the New Haven Edition of Henry Constable's "unanswerable argument" on the Life and Death question—published in THE TIMES of Nov. 7—is a distinguished Professor in Yale College. It must be that the example of a man holding such a position in such an institution will be considerable in influencing men of like faith but less moral courage, whose future corresponding announcements will be of great service.

Inquires one of the San Francisco religious weeklies, speaking a few days ago: "Why are there no more revivals? What shall we do to revive the churches?" The answer is handy and sure enough: "Preach the word." Mrs. Fassett dwelt upon this text, as I have already written, last Sunday. "Preach the word!" Purify your churches of their fables, and there will be a great quickening of the hearers.

O church conductors! Do you not know that nine out of ten of your auditors do not go to your folds to hear something for their spiritual benefit? It's an old, old story. They go to exhibit their good clothes, and to see how their neighbors dress. And John goes because Mary goes; her parents are "blue," and John is betrothed to Mary, and must "keep in" with the "old folks." And so on. The anterooms, the Sunday-school rooms, etc., are good places for gossip. And to others still there is an opiate for the really sensitive conscience that cries out and will not be hushed—until a "strong delusion" is devised by Satan for its quieting, in the shape of "works" in catechising and regular pew attendance. Fashion takes the lead, and then self-righteousness characterizes nearly one-half of the remaining tenth.

If when the "last bell" is sounding on Sunday morning the last words uttered by the church-going people in their houses, as they are about to go into the street, could be heard, would it not indicate that they were not only largely but altogether concerned about their personal appearance? How many Christian ladies are left at home inconsolable, every Sunday, because they have "nothing to wear"—i. e., have not the latest fashions. The most of these have been in church attendance for years, without giving any signs of being solemnly impressed with the words of the preacher.

Fact is: popular theology inspires no man, or woman, either, with the right fear or the right love of God. In spite of the errors of the creeds, some are brought to a saving sense and discipline. Popular theology cannot convert except under extraordinary circumstances, which conspire to practically modify its teachings. Inquire into your creeds, O men of orthodoxy, and reform them altogether. Then people will be converted under your ministration.

Imagine—the very thought is electrical—if every orthodox minister in the land should to-morrow announce from his pulpit that he had become convinced that there was no eternal life out of Christ; that only those adults who on this scene of probation are converted shall enjoy eternal existence; and that on this earth "renewed" the saints are to dwell with a personal Christ, forever and ever! Do you doubt that revivals of unprecedented extent and power would spring up all over the land? None of the sweet but fatal comforts of a restorationism permitted then. And no man repelled from the first glance by the manifest injustice that belongs to the eternal torment theory.

And then if you could add to this imagining, that from every orthodox pulpit in the land the cry should henceforth be raised: "Lo! the Bridegroom is near at hand! Make ready to meet him!" What tremendous revivals would ensue; judging from our best stand-points of experience.

In other words: What marvels of reformation would be wrought by the simple preaching of the WORD by those who now uphold in Christian, Protestant pulpits, with utmost strenuousness and bigotry, the prime falsehood of Satan!

It is manifest, I think, that conversions made in spite of the error that characterize the orthodox proclamation, are to be less and less as the heralds of the whole truth increase in numbers and energy.

In all this there is nothing to render an Advent Christian "high-minded;" for a proportion of the responsibility comes to the mind and heart with a conception of the advantage and the necessity of a clean gospel. If we have more evidently the reviving truth, then is ours the more earnest work of propagation and confirming. And it appears to be so in demonstration.

Dr. Scudder, formerly the most popular preacher in this city, emigrated to Brooklyn, N. Y. (for his health), and at the latter place confessed and said: "It was of no use trying to get up anything like a revival in our church (Presbyterian) in San Francisco. My church grew steadily, but there was nothing like a revival. But an Advent preacher named Grant did come out there last winter and stir up an old fashioned religious excitement. I had him conduct one or two of my prayer-meetings. I believe he was a good man, if he was a little fanatical. I told him at the outset that he couldn't get up a revival, but he did. Though I always had crowded congregations, I gave up all idea of a revival."

Oh! how glorious is Bible truth! We can comprehend and fully acknowledge the perfect justice that cuts off the incorrigibly wicked; the more we reflect upon the actual penalty fixed, the more its righteousness appears. But, on the other hand, we cannot comprehend the love of God and Christ towards us poor worms of the dust. And so from affection on one side, soliciting and rational judgment set on the other side, we are impelled to submit, to enlist, to consecrate. So it ought to be.

Tuesday night is a pleasant night here. THE TIMES arrives that night. It is a good paper. I love to read of that old man's journeyings around in the wild places of Arkansas—enduring hardship as a good soldier, even when past the usual limit of years for active missionary service. I can readily behold scenes in some of those log houses that would be worthy of the artist's pencil, the veteran elder expounding, discoursing, conversing, singing, praying concerning the last times of earth, to the last generation of pioneers, and breaking the commemorative bread to the rough backwoodsmen of America; and organizing churches in the midst of virgin forests, in rude buildings, around which the ravenous beasts nightly prowl in search for food. Heaven's choicest blessings on the old man, say I; and from reading his record may we all rise ashamed of our comparativley unsacrificing and insignificant service, even when all the differences and disparities of our lives measurably excusing us from such entirely devoted work, are counted in our favor.

A few more days and for all the world and the sum of the inhabitants thereof there will be an everlasting decision. The whole creation groaneth in pain. And for us there are groanings that cannot be uttered; or there are thanksgivings such as mortal ear never heard. Unconverted as yet; or already named in the Lamb's Book of Life! To die no more! Awful thoughts. How plain it is that we ought to venture and encounter all things, so that we may live forever with Jesus. A.

The Harrisonville Debate.

I observe that The Christian Record has some remarks on this debate. Among other things The Record acknowledges that Br. Green was "very pleasant and gentlemanly in his manners and courteous to his opponent." "But," it continues, "he was no match for Br. Treat. (1.) Because he had a bad cause to manage. (2.) Because as a debater he was not able to stand before the ponderous logic, and sledge-hammer arguments of Br. Treat."

Now let us look at some of Eld. Treat's "sledge-hammer arguments." Once he has the spirit of the rich man, together with the spirits of all the dead, in hades, which he claimed was divided into paradise and a place of torment. Another time he has them returning to God, and Paul's spirit wanting to depart and be with Christ, "whom God hath raised up," Peter tells us, and "was not left in hades." Then he attempted to get out of the difficulty, into which he had plunged himself by claiming that God was everywhere, and nowhere in particular! This is, doubtless, "ponderous logic" in the estimation of The Record! But more. Another time he denied the power of knowledge or intelligence to the physical organism. But when Br. Green quoted Eccl. 9: 5—"For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything," he said that referred to the physical organism or body. "Ponderous logic" that! Such self-contradictions are about on par with the following: "I contend," said Mr. A., "that my dog could not have bitten Mr. B. for the following reasons. 1, My dog was chained at the time the event took place. 2. My dog was dead two weeks before. And, 3, I never had a dog."

Many such examples might be given, but this must suffice. Br. Green, in replying to his argument on the rich man and Lazarus, showed that the equivalent of hades in Hebrew was sheol, which is a place where "there is no work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom." (Eccl. 9: 10.) And that hades is to deliver up the dead in the resurrection (Rev. 20; 13), and it cannot deliver up the dead unless it contains the dead; and if it contains the spirit, as Eld. Treat claimed, the spirits are dead, for hades is to deliver up the dead. He produced many invincible arguments which cannot be given here. He gave the account of man's creation and fall. He gave many cases in which disease or injury of the brain totally destroyed consciousness. He showed many contradictions and inconsistencies of Treat's reasonings. He remained calm and unexcited during the whole debate. Eld. Treat was abusive and appeared very much excited or out of humor. The attendance was large, and the impression upon unprejudiced minds was favorable. The Record says, "To say that the truth in the hands of Treat, gained a perfect triumph, would only be to repeat what every one who heard the debate would say." This is a grand mistake, and it ought to have known better than to make the assertion. From what I could learn, most of those outside the Disciple church acknowledge that Br. Green gained the victory, especially on the last proposition. H. PURVEL.

A Temptation.

"If thou faint, in the day of adversity, thy strength is small." (Prov. 24: 10.)

Says the enemy of all righteousness, who goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, "Any body, would faint under such peculiar trials as you have to pass through; no body could stand them!" So he would be glad to have us believe, causing us to fret, and worry, over the little unavoidable ills of life, magnifying every little difficulty, causing us to dwell on them, till a molehill becomes a mountain, over which it seems impossible to pass. He knows full well, if he can succeed in injecting into our minds little wrongs, (or supposed wrongs), keeping them before the mind's eye causing us to dwell on them constantly, he has gained his point. Then come in the works of the flesh, which are hatred, variance, old grudges, etc. These crowd out the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long suffering, etc., causing us to forget for a season that it is written, "forbearing one another in love, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake forgave you."

Dear fellow pilgrim, has the enemy ever approached you so warily, transforming himself into an angel of light, coming in the garb of a sympathetic friend, professing so much sympathy, that you have been ignorant of his devices, and been overcome? If so, "we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous," who is still pleading for us. The Spirit truly is willing, but the flesh is weak. He has not ceased pleading. Now is the time to retrace our steps; to repent, lest after all, we be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Who of us will stand when he comes to make up his jewels. If we are to be presented faultless before the throne, without spot or wrinkle, having washed our robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, who will be able to stand? C. CARR.

The right disposition of mind is that which desires earnestly the truth, in whatever manner it may come to us.—John Foster.

collisions, in 1869 were 1,643, or 512 more than in 1870. The total losses in 1870, by casualties other than collisions were 411, of which 63 were from defects in the ship or equipments, 77 from carelessness or neglect, and the remainder from various other causes. The total number of British ships totally lost on and near the coasts of the United Kingdom, from unseaworthiness, in the last ten years is 538, and the casulties resulting in partial damage from the same causes are 586.

The loss of life attending the disasters in 1870 was 774, which is 159 less than in 1869, and a smaller number than in any year since 1865. Of the 774, 180 were from one vessel, the illfated steamer Cambria, bound from New York to Glasgow, and 200 from nine other ships, nearly one-half of the lives lost being from ten ships.

In connection, the Wreck Register gives the operations of the National Life-boat Association. During 1870 the number of lives saved from vessels was 4,654, hundreds being rescued by that institution. It has a fleet of 230 life boats, and rescues every year about 800 ship-wrecked persons. Altogether, since its establishment, it has contributed to rescuing from death upward of 20,000 people.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

" " " A conclave of Cardinals to consider the action the College should take in the the event of the Pope's death, is shortly to be held at some point in France.

" " " An allocution of the Pope is published, in which, while he recognizes the Bishops appointed by the Italian Government as possessing the requisite qualifications of their offices, he solemnly repudiates Italy's "guarantees," and protests against the invasion of the Holy See. The allocution also condemns the course of Dr. von Dollinger, and such as are following his example, in warring against the decisions of the Œcumenical Council.

" " " The losses sustained by the Presbyterian denomination of Chicago in the great fire, are summed up as follows by a writer in the Interior: "Our three oldest, largest, and wealthiest churches are utterly destroyed; a number of our mission schools are burned up; the homes of nearly 15,000 members of our congregations are in ashes; almost every prominent business man in any one of the churches—whether of those destroyed or of those saved—is crippled, if not ruined, by losses sustained by the fire; our seminary is placed in straitened circumstances because of the failure of its invested funds to yield a revenue sufficient to meet its expenses, and out of the $1,500,000, which is the estimated total loss of the churches in this city, nearly one third of this falls upon the Presbyterian Church of Chicago."

Obituary.

COLTON—In Clinton, DeKalb Co. Ill., Nov. 12, 1871, of Typhoid fever, Samuel Chapman Colton: aged 16 years 7 months 9 days.

Chapman was named by Father Samuel Chapman who many years ago preached in this neighborhood and was the means of doing much good. Br. Colton's family have been seriously afflicted by typhoid fever, and although Br. Colton himself was laid very low, yet God has seen fit to grant the recovery of all except Chapman. His parents, brothers, and sisters, feel his loss severely, but God's grace sustains them. Services by the writer from Jas. 4: 14. "For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." F. BURR.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 36¼ down to 21¾. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh: it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

The Harmony of Scripture on Future Punishment.—No. 3.

LIFE.

And this brings us to the great central fact in the whole controversy,—namely, that life, eternal life, living for ever, immortality, is the special privilege offered to those who seek it, by patient continuance in well-doing; while death and destruction is constantly threatened as the end of those who obey not the gospel of God. Life or death! life or death!—this is what Scripture rings with from beginning to end. If these reiterated promises and threatenings are to be understood in their plain natural sense, the question is settled, and the whole difficulty removed.

Now there are some very strong reasons in favor of so understanding them, in addition to the prima facie presumption against the predominating language of Scripture on any given subject being meant to be taken in a non-natural sense. Let us first consider the promise of everlasting life in the world to come.

1. Every one must admit that the world life does not involve holiness or happiness; otherwise as Archbishop Whateley remarks, to speaks of a happy life would be mere tautology, and to speak of a miserable life a contradiction in terms. A man may lead a miserable and wicked life, as well as a holy and happy life. Now, if both the righteous and the wicked are to spend an everlasting life of happiness, or if the righteous are to spend an everlasting life of happiness, and the wicked an everlasting life of misery, how can "everlasting life" simply be so constantly promised, in one form or another, as the reward of the righteous? It must of course mean on that supposition, an everlasting life of holiness and happiness. How strange that the points of difference between their future lot and that of the wicked should be so entirely passed over in these reiterated promises to the righteous, and the language be studiously framed, so as to express no more than what is common to them both,—namely that they shall live for ever, that they shall be immortal, and have eternal life! That anything so misleading should ever occur in Scripture, is very difficult to believe; that it should be the prevailing habit of Scripture is absolutely incredible.

If, on the other hand, it be a revealed truth that the whole universe is ultimately to be reconciled to Christ, so that God may be all in all, the explanation is obvious. To promise any one everlasting life is to promise him a share in that universal blessedness. There is no need to specify in words that it will be a life of holiness and happiness, for there can be no other eternal life; to live forever in sin and misery is imposible.

2. But this is not all. Even if we could believe that the (zoe, life), which is so constantly promised to the righteous, was only the exaggerated language "of poetry or passion," and meant, not life, but all that is commonly thought to be worth living for, there is another word, which is impossible so to explain away: (psuche) can only mean—either the soul, as distinguished from the body, or else natural life; and our Lord most distinctly asserts several times, that our own psuche is what we shall either preserve or lose hereafter. He asserts it, also, in contrast to our preserving or losing it here. If we are unwilling to sacrifice our life now, should it be required by faithfulness to him, we shall certainly be deprived of it then, whether we will or no. Once, indeed our Lord adds "unto everlasting zoe." (John 12: 25.) But that this is only intended to emphasize what he elsewhere expresses simply by preserving the psuche, appears very plainly from its being contrasted with the loss by the unfaithful—not of their zoe, but of their own psuche. The alternative was precisely that which had been put by Ezekiel: "When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness which he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall "save his soul alive."

3. Furthermore, we are told, that when Adam had marred "the image of God, after which he was created in righteousness and true holiness," he was debarred from access to the tree of life, so that he might not eat of it and live forever. By this familiar expression, of such constant occurrence afterwards, no one understands here, in the first place where it is found, is original ruling utterance,—lest he should be holy forever, lest he should be happy forever, lest he should know God, and possess everything which makes life desirable. The tree of life was given for no such purpose: it was given that he might live forever, that he might keep possession of the life bestowed upon him when the Creator breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. The happiness of that life depended internally upon his consciousness of God's favor, and externally upon surrounding circumstances being in harmony with the nature that God had given him.

4. Observe also how our Lord compares the life which he bestows, with that which was sustained by manna in the wilderness: "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead: this is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." (John 6: 49, 50.) If "not die" means not remain wicked and miserable, where is the contrast to the manna? No; it was given to sustain their physical life. This it could do only for a time. The bread which Christ gives will sustain it forever. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall not die for ever." (John 11: 25, 26.)

In fact, the more closely we examine the passages of Scripture which speak of eternal life as the gift of God in Christ Jesus, the more certain does it appear, that they include, and not presuppose, the possession of endless physical life.

DEATH.

If this be so, it follows, as a matter of course, that the death, which is the wages of sin, must be the loss of that physical life; a conclusion which is supported by the strongest corroborative evidence that could well be conceived.

In the first place there is no other death which can be inflicted, on impenitent sinners, in the day of judgment. What is death?[1] The cessation of life. There are various kinds of life, and therefore there are various kinds of death;, but death, regarded as an act, is the cessation of life, and nothing else. Regarded as a condition, it is the state of anything from which life has departed. We speak inaccurately of dead matter, meaning only that it is without life; but, properly speaking, nothing is dead that has not died, and nothing can properly be said to die that could not have been said, in some sense or other, to possess life. The first question therefore is, What kind of life will the wicked possess in the day of judgment to be deprived of? If they are then to suffer death, it must be by the deprivation of some life which they then possess. What can it be?

Spiritual life they lost in Adam, and have never regained. They are already dead in "trespasses and sins." In that sense "they have no life in them," and therefore have none to be deprived of. They are already "alienated from the life of God," "children of wrath," "aliens from the commonweath of Israel," "without God." It cannot therefore be the loss of holiness or of God's favor that will constitute "the second death," to be inflicted on them at the final judgment.

Neither can it be the loss of peace and joy and happiness; for these they they do not possess, and cannot be deprived of. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." "Man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upwards." "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Some of them, no doubt enjoy "the pleasures of sin for a season;" but many are debarred even from these, and pass whole lives of unredeemed misery from their cradle to to their grave. To talk of their possessing anything in the way of happiness, which could be called life, and the loss of which could be called death, is simply absurd. That Divine power would be able to make them still more wretched than they are, of course we admit. But it would be an utter abuse of language to call that taking away their life, or inflicting death upon them We are waiving the question, whether happiness in itself, apart from holiness and the conscious enjoyment of God's favor, could ever be called life; and we are also waiving any consideration of the intermediate state—or else we should ask, What life does the rich man in hades now possess, that can be taken from him when he is cast body and soul into gehenna? The state of the wicked in this life is quite sufficient to decide the question. And we ask, What life do they possess, that can be taken away or destroyed, except their natural life, which consists in the possession of a reasonable soul and body? What other death CAN they die, except physical death?

The Augustinian theory is, that the second death will merely be a continuation of their present spiritual death, that is, alienation from God, with a vast addition to their unhappiness both in mind and body. But this is not the view that Scripture gives of it. Scripture tells them that they shall die, and not merely that they shall continue dead under circumstances of agravated misery. It represents God as inflicting death upon them, casting them into hell, and destroying them body and soul. And God never inflicts spiritual death upon any one. They destroy themselves spiritually, and therefore God destroys them in some other way. What other way is there, except by depriving them of the only life they have left?

And was not this manifestly the death threatened to Adam if he disobeyed? Does any one seriously believe that he could possibly have understood the words "Thou shalt surely die" to mean—either, Thou shalt incur the penalty of everlasting misery, —or, Thou wilt have to undergo corrective discipline for thy restoration to holiness? Could he have imagined it to mean any thing but that he should become like "the natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," and should "utterly perish?" And is it conceivable that the Creator, when placing him in a position of such tremendous responsibility, would fail to put before him with the utmost clearness what would be the consequence of failure; or that he would veil the terrific prospect of eternal torment under the simple word—die? Unless the wages of sin has since then undergone a radical and unspeakably awful change, it must surely be—DEATH.

And that it had not undergone any change, at least to the time of Moses, is evident from St. Paul's adducing the death of infants, "who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression," as an instance of the penalty incurred by Adam's sin. It was not spiritual or figurative, but literal, bodily "death" which "reigned over them."

It is true, as we learn from revelation, that the death of a compound being like man does not necessarily involve his immediate and total extinction: the soul may survive bodily dissolution. But as our Lord declares that it will not survive "the second death," but that the whole will be destroyed "body and soul" it follows, either that a heavier penalty will then be inflicted than was threatened to Adam, or, that the death threatened to Adam would have naturally resulted, sooner or later, in the extinction of his whole being. We firmly believe the latter. We believe that, the reasonable soul and body having been created to form one man, neither of them has any natural power to live apart from the other, nor would do so for a moment without Divine interposition. Why the sustaining of all human souls in conscious existence, until the final judgment was necessary, we may, or may not, be able to see.

Some may argue that resurrection would be sufficient to meet the requirements of redemption and retribution; others may reply that the resurrection of that which had wholly passed out of existence would be merely the creation of a being with a close resemblance to, but not possessing personal identity with, that which previously existed. Be that as it may, the two facts are revealed with perfect distinctness,—that the soul does survive the first death, man not being able to kill it, when he kills the body; and that will not survive the second death, for God can, and will kill it.—S. Minton, in Rainbow.

[1] "The word death, however, has remained true to its original in its various applications. Thus, we have in Scripture the expressions 'dead to sin—dead to the law;' in our Catechism we have the phrase 'a death unto sin;' in ordinary life we speak of persons as being dead to certain passions or affections. All such expressions are derived from physical death, and are true to its original sense. They imply the departure and non-existence of relations and feelings which once were living and strong—their death. To the sense imposed on death in all times and by all nations there is one exception, that given to it in the theology of a portion of Christendom; compelled by a terrific creed of punishment, death is made to mean its direct opposite—'Life'—some 'condition of being' or existence."—"The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork. Longmans. A most masterly and conclusive pamphlet.

Dr. Johnson gives ten meanings to the word death; the last of which is stated thus:—"In theology—damnation, eternal torments." In other words, theology is compelled, as Mr. Constable observes, to make death mean its exact opposite—namely, everlasting life—in torment.

THE HARRISONVILLE DISCUSSION —ONCE MORE.

The editor of the Record appears to have lost his temper, for which we are sorry. He also has fallen under the impression that we have believed "without a particle of testimony" what we stated of the discussion. This is a mistake. Amongst other evidence upon which our opinion was based, we present the following:

We, whose names are hereunto appended, do hereby certify that we have carefully examined the letter, over the signature of R. B. Williams, and under the caption of "Harrisonville, Ind., Debate," published in THE ADVENT TIMES of Oct. 10, and that it is virtually correct in every particular, and does not bear even the shadow of a misrepresentation. We were present very nearly all the time at the debate, and do not hesitate to endorse said letter as to its correctness. We would further say that we do not belong either to the church of Mr. Treat, or of Mr. Green; and only hereby express our approbation of the above letter in vindication of truth and justice.

Signed: S. F. LEONARD, D. R. DUNEHEW (?), J. N. WAGGONER, JOHN SANDERS, WM. ANDERSON, J. C. ROBINSON.

—The author of the original letter, R. B. Williams, assures us that very much more testimony to the same effect could be procured from parties belonging to neither of the churches represented in the debate; and that for his own part, he stated "clearly and conscientiously in the letter, what he knew to be correct;" and as he was present throughout the debate, except during two speeches, he should certainly be tolerably well prepared to judge of its general features. It is the Record that "misrepresents" when it intimates that Br. Williams only attended one session of the discussion, and resorted to "misrepresentation" in reporting what he did not see and hear.

Some Christians think that by compromising with the world they will draw it to them. But no; the world, on the contrary, draws them to it.—Cavan.

How Long.

Do they still linger these slow treading ages?
  How long must we still bear their cold delay!
Streak after streak their glowing dawn presages;
  And yet it breaks not—the expected day!

Each tossing year with prophet-lip hath spoken,
  "Prepare your praises, earth awake and sing!"
And yet yon dome of blue remains unbroken;
  No tidings yet of the descending King!

Darkness still darkens; now nearer and nearer
  The lightnings gleam; the sea's scorched billows moan;
And the sere leaf of earth is growing serer;
  Creation droops and heaves a bitter groan.

O storm and earthquake, wind and warring thunder,
  Your hour is coming! One wild outburst more,
One other day of war, and wreck and plunder;
  And then your desolating reign is o'er.

These plains are not your battle-field for ever;
  This grassy deep was never made for you;
These mountains were not built for you to shiver;
  These buds are not for your rude hands to strew.

Flee and give back to earth its verdant gladness,
  The early freshness of its unsoiled dew;
Take hence your sackcloth, with its stormy sadness,
  And let these wrinkled skies their youth renew.

Come back, thou holy love, so rudely banished,
  When evil came, and hate, and fear, and wrong;
Return thou joyous light so quickly vanished;
  Revive, thou life that death has quenched so long.

Re-fix, re-knit the chain so harshly broken,
  That bound in blissful love earth to yon bright heaven;
Hang up on high the ever golden token,
  The healed earth renewed and man forgiven.

Withdraw the veil that has for ages hidden
  That upper kingdom from this nether sphere;
Reveal that fellowship so long forbidden;
  O God! thy tabernacle, thy dwelling here.

From England.

Br. Himes: It would be some consolation to me to be freed from business so that I might have more time for correspondence, and be better able to do all that is in my heart in regard to the utterance of that glorious testimony of our hope, now so necessary for the awakening of the sleepers and the disobedient, and the encouragement and strengthening and consolation of many in these times of distress and trial and famine of the bread of life. But patience must have its perfect work, and I do not repine. I might have been wholly engaged in the ministry many years ago in the church of England, but I could not conscientiously accept the position and the emolument. I thought to have offered myself as a missionary among the Wesleyans, but again Providence interposed. I might have been wholly engaged long ere this among the Irvingites (so-called), who bear a most valuable testimony to the coming and kingdom of our Lord; but with them I could not remain, because of their adoption of most fundamental errors, and their very high ritualistic form of worship. Their sympathies are with the highest of the high church portion of the church of England, and far more with the Papacy itself than with Dissent. But even worse than that, and worst of all, is the underlying error of their whole creed and system, that the twelve apostles have been restored in person, i. e., in the persons of others chosen to that office, in the midst of the church, and to themselves in particular for that they have the faith to receive them, and to make declaration of the fact. I cannot conceive any more likely position from whence the personal anti-christ, which so many look for, might spring. Judas, the type of the anti-christ of these last days, was an apostle, was near his Lord, made profession of faith in him, and was active in outward service to him. But there was a flaw in his profession, a sandy foundation, a fatal defect in his form of obedience. As with the typical anti-christ, Judas, so with the anti-christ whom he foreshadowed, the apostacy of the middle ages, and the culminating of that apostacy in the battle of the great day, in Armageddon, when the armies of heaven headed by Jesus the Captain of our salvation, shall be opposed by the beast, which denotes the power of the Gentiles, and by him who sitteth thereupon, even the anti-christ, the betrayer of his Lord, in his body the church.

On this subject, my mind has been and is much exercised. I was with that people several years; in all honesty and sincerity I hoped they might be in the truth; but had always a misgiving as to the foundation; and to doubt was to sin, according to their creed as also with the Romanists, I schooled myself as best I could into quietude, until I was forced from among them by a flood of light and an irresistible power. The gorgeously vested priest, the altar, the sacrifice of the mass, (but little better than transubstantiation), the lights and incense, a profusion of crosses, bowing toward the altar and the host (and by an easy transition to him who makes the host, and then to him who betrays his Lord); holy water, and the confessional with other resemblances to the Roman harlot, were enough, as you may well suppose, to cause both a keen observation of myself, and of the system of which I had become an abettor.

But I am free and unattached, and have so been since coming out from thence. And I did not now begin to write you with the intention of enlarging upon that matter, but to say that I hope very soon to be better able to help in the good cause. There seems to be an awakening in this country to the grand throne. The press is pouring forth its treasures on the subject in great profusion, and with great ability in many quarters. The signs of the end are multiplying. The events are filling in rapidly. The times are all dovetailing to that point, and we are surely near it, when the glorious appearing of the Lord shall crown the work of his grace, and his glory shall appear as the seal of salvation upon his chosen.

I ought to say that I do not expect the personal anti-christ to arise from among the Irvingite apostles; indeed I do not expect a personal anti-christ at all in the sense or manner which many brethren seem to look for him; but if a personal anti-christ is to arise according to the expectation of those brethren, an apostle is surely the most likely person after the examples of Judas; and therefore I said the Irvingite apostleship presents a probable source. But the Mormons also have an apostleship, and of a very different order. The number of that apostleship is twelve. And they, too, bear witness to the coming of the Lord, they baptise by immersion for the remission of sins, they have prophets, evangelists, and pastors, and faith, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, and gifts of healing, and many other distinguishing traits. From the area of that apostleship the personal anti-christ may arise, if he is to come as a person.

But for myself I cannot lose sight of that great field and system of the apostacy, called Papacy, in relation to the final events of the great anti-christian opposition to the Lord and to his church. There we have an avowed apostolic succession, and a head to the apostleship, a head—or, rather, the head of the apostacy, the head on earth of the church in her apostatized condition. This has been her condition for several centuries. Is the closing act of rebellion and opposition of this age to be wrought out by some other body than the Papacy, to have some other head than the Pope! Is the responsibility to be shifted from that system which for so long a time lived and prospered on the ignorance and the wealth and the sufferings of the masses of the people, and of Christ's little flock! It surely cannot be so. Because the dominion of the Papacy and its power to persecute unto death has been taken away, and is being consumed by the Spirit of Christ's mouth in the testimony of his servants, and because the Roman church demeans itself in accordance with the altered condition of the times, it is thought by some that the disposition to persecute is changed, or has ceased. This cannot be so, else the church of Rome must have ignored its professed infallibility; but recently it has avowed that principle more than ever, and made a world-wide profession that infallibility is personally inherited by the Pope as head of the church, and that by the Pope the church has been and is infallibly guided.

Because the Pope professes faith in [illegible], many think he is not, and cannot be, that man of sin, the anti-christ, of these last days. They say the anti-christ must be an avowed opponent to Christ, an infidel indeed, or an atheist. But this would not agree with the type in Judas, who was an apostle, and a traitor, and became at a certain period of his profession devilishly possessed for, and instigated to do, the work for which he was chosen and called. Even so the anti-christ must be an apostle in profession, false at heart, a betrayer, a liar, and a murderer. Such has been and is the Papacy as a system, of which the Pope is the head. This is the character of that particular system of law and of government which for so long a time has oppressed the world and trampled down the saints of the Most High. It is not true of all the adherents. Many have been held in association through fear, and ignorance, and interest. The hearts and lives of many are better than their profession, and in contrast to the system. This is true to the end, when the great mystic Babylon shall fall, and the voice of the good Shepherd shall be heard, saying, "Come ye out of her, my people, that ye partake not of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

That end is near. Preparation for the casting down is being made. When the announcement is made, "Babylon is fallen!" The time of visitation, like unto that accorded to God's ancient people, will then be realised, and the people prepared made ready for their Lord. That interval exhausted, the mighty angel of Jehovah will cast down the great Babylon like a millstone into the depths of the sea, to rise no more, then shall the great Dragon, called also the Devil and Satan, be cast into the bottomless pit, and there confined for a thousand years, so that he shall deceive the nations no more until the end of that time. The millennial day will be one of peace, and righteousness, and rest, and knowledge, and holiness, and glory, and joy, and praise, and endless life with immortality begun. No more pain, or weariness, or sorrow, or tears, or death. The last enemy destroyed and swallowed up in victory. Heaven and earth created anew, and so combined as that the vision and mystery of Jacob's ladder shall be practically intelligible. Eye hath not yet seen, nor ear heard, the glorious things in preparation for those who love and serve God. Enoch and Elijah and Christ did not more surely ascend into the heavens, than will the saints of the first resurrection, and the first fruits of the harvest. Unto this great honor all the saints of God shall come.

The Lord's Coming—Its Prominence and Importance.

Bickersteth states, after careful examination, that at least one verse in thirty of the New Testament relates to the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. If he had included allusions to this great event as well as direct references, the proportion would have been still more striking; for there are more than three hundred and twenty verses out of seven thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine found in the New Testament that point forward as with eager gesture to the future appearing of the Saviour. This fact is most suggestive of the high value placed upon the doctrine by the divine Spirit who dictated the word of God, and it stands in significant contrast with the strange silence of many of our preachers and writers respecting a topic of momentous importance in the estimation of the inspired penmen.

Nay, it has come to pass that by far the larger number of professed Christians regard with suspicion and receive with scarcely suppressed sneers a sermon or published treatise on the subject so prominently set forth in the Sacred Scriptures, while they do not hesitate to apply the epithet "crazy" to the minister of the gospel who openly proclaims his belief of a doctrine constantly asserted by Christ and the Apostles. There can be no stronger proof than this of the rapid progress made by "the apostacy" predicted in the second Epistle to the Thessalonians, and of the ruin in which Christendom is involved. All the truths of God's word are, of course, important, but their relative importance, if I may so speak, can be fairly estimated by considering the prominence given to them in the revelations of the Holy Ghost. When, for example, we find the doctrine of our Lord's divinity repeatedly affirmed in every book of the New Testament, and the doctrine of human redemption through his blood pervading the gospel, and the doctrine of faith or belief in his name as essential to salvation stated about five hundred times, it is proper to infer that these doctrines possess special value to the mind of the Spirit. What shall we say, then, when we discover that the doctrine of our Lord's second coming is distinctly proclaimed or incidentally mentioned in one verse of every twenty-five perhaps in the New Testament? Can it be right to neglect such a truth? Can it be right to banish it from our thoughts and discourse as a forbidden subject? If our ministers and Professors in the Theological Seminaries should rarely or never clearly announce the doctrine of Christ's true and proper divinity, or his atoning sacrifice for sin, or the necessity of faith in him, they would be justly regarded by every real Christian as sadly derelict in duty; and surely they are no less derelict when they fail to announce the second coming of the Lord, no matter what may be their views of his coming in relation to the Millennium.

In reply, however, to a charge so grave, and that will be regarded by ninety-nine out of a hundred as so rash and presumptuous, we are met by two objections that are commonly urged against the claim of Christ's second coming upon our attention. The first is that the doctrine has been fearfully abused and perverted by reckless men who have mounted it as a hobby to the exclusion of other important truths, and by their unwise predictions made havoc of the church to the full extent of their baneful influence. In answer to this it is enough to ask what truth of God's word has not been abused and perverted by the cunning and malice of Satan? If the objection can be brought against the doctrine of Christ's second coming, it can be brought with equal force against precious doctrines just mentioned, and against all other doctrines which the great adversary sees to be particularly dangerous to the success of his schemes. Since the doctrine has been perverted by reckless men, manifestly it should be carefully studied and clearly expounded by judicious men who are set for the defense of the truth. Without doubt these reckless men have done incalculable mischief by their foolish predictions, but I venture the assertion that such predictions have more frequently been made by writers who believe in the post-millennial advent of Christ than by writers who believe in his pre-millennial advent. All who are familiar with the current literature on this theme can remember how often it has been confidently asserted that Romanism would be overthrown in 1866, and the sun of a spiritual Millennium, without the personal presence of Christ, immediately rise in cloudless splendor. The year 1871 has come, and Romanism still lives and flourishes, exciting the fears of Protestant England and the United States, and pushing her triumphs in every direction except in certain portions of the continent of Europe where she has been forced to yield to the assaults of a more hopeless infidelity, while the expected spiritual Millennium is as far off as ever. It is almost absolutely certain that a much larger number of persons are now living on the earth who know not the Saviour of sinners than there were when Paul fell a martyr for Jesus in the reign of Nero.

The second objection urged against the claim of Christ's coming to our attention consists in the fact that the doctrine belongs to prophecy, the study of which, it is alleged, is at least fruitless of good, if not perilous to the soul. Surely those who urge this objection do not reflect that it boldly and blasphemously impugns the wisdom and love of God in giving us a revelation. for if you exclude prophecy from the field of your observation, the Bible becomes a meaningless and worthless book. The first promise made to our fallen parents in the garden of Eden was a prophecy. The bloody sacrifice of Abel and the acceptable offerings of the Patriarchs were based on prophecy. The preaching of Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was nothing but prophecy so far as we are informed. The Pentateuch is crowded with prophecy in type or in words. The service of the Tabernacle and the divinely appointed ritual of the Jews are eloquent with the deep tones of prophecy. The historical books of the Old Testament are radiant with the light of prophecy. A very large proportion of the Psalms is entirely occupied with prophecy. The whole of the Scriptures from Isaiah to Malachi consists of prophecy. The ministry of John the Baptist was absorbed with prophecy. The discourses of our Lord are filled with prophecy. All the leading epistles of the New Testament contain prophecy. and the last book of the Bible is prophecy throughout. Not only so, but the consolation we hope to receive, if called, to die, we owe to prophecy. All we know of the resurrection of the body we owe to prophecy. All we have earned of heaven we owe to prophecy. All we expect to enjoy amid the unfading glories and thrilling raptures of the eternal city we owe to prophecy. All the promises of God's word that remain to be fulfilled in our personal experience, and in the future of the church and in the history of the world, are prophecy and nothing but prophecy.

What then do these thoughtless persons mean by their inconsiderate objections to the study of prophecy? Is it nothing that our Father has condescended to inform his children of the glorious things in store for them? Is his condescension to be met with contempt and his revelation with deliberate neglect? Is it respectful and reverent to say that he has given us a book a very large portion of which it is unprofitable to read, or that it is profitable only after the fulfillment of its predictions in order to confirm the truth of his word? Does his word need to be confirmed by historical events before we deem it worthy of our belief? Alas! objections like these show to what a fearful extent, rationalism, or to use the plain and proper word, infidelity has invaded not only the pew but the pulpit. In speaking of prophecy to ministers of the Gospel whom I esteem and love, I have often felt sadness and surprise at their reply that they knew nothing of it, and then at their self-satisfied smile as they intimated that they were in the habit of giving attention to subjects of far greater practical importance. Was the prophecy of the coming deluge of no practical importance to those who lived before the flood? Was the prophecy of the coming storm of fire and brimstone that swept the cit[illegible] of Sodom and Gomorrah of no pra[illegible] importance to Lot and his fa[illegible] Was the prophecy of the coming [illegible]tivity of Israel of no practical impo[illegible]nce to the inhabitants of Jerusalem [illegible]vious to the Chaldean invasion? W[illegible] the prophecy of the coming M[illegible] no practical importance to th[illegible]ho waited and watched for h[illegible]g? And can the do[illegible]trine [illegible]ond coming be of no practic[illegible]ance when it is held up to o[illegible] on almost every page of the New Testament? When I hear Christians express themselves in this loose and unguarded manner, at once the prayer springs from my heart, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Not thus do the inspired apostles speak of this shamefully neglected part of God's truth, for Peter says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts." If those do well who take heed to the sure word of prophecy and follow it as a shining light amid the darkness of this world, can those do well who give no heed to it, but dismiss it from their minds with the flippant remark that it is of no practical value? Even of the book of Revelation, confessedly the most difficult of sound exposition of any portion of the Bible, it is written, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy," and can they who neither read nor hear it expect to receive the promised blessing? In ancient times Jehovah said by the mouth of his prophet, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word," but in modern times, thousands who profess to be his children by faith in Jesus Christ boastingly slight much of his word, and regard the man who preaches it as a dangerous fanatic.—Dr. J. H. Brookes, in the Old School Presbyterian.

The Apocslypse.

In the book of Revelation are the following: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand"—1:3. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches"—2:7, 11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22. "Come up higher, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter"—4:1. "And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand"—22:10. "And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be"—12th verse.

God calls this book a REVELATION: men generally think it a very poor one and treat it accordingly! God says, "Blessed is he that reads" it: men generally say, "It will not pay." God says, "Seal not these sayings:" men generally say, "They are already sealed!" God says, "The time is at hand:" many men say, "No man is authorized to say the time is at hand!" What a great pity it is, that the very last words of our blessed Savior are treated with so much indifference and coldness, not to say with scorn and contempt!—Cor. West. Recorder.

From San Francisco.

Mrs. O. R. Fassett preached yesterday (Sunday, Nov. 12) morning and evening, at the Christian chapel, opposite new mint, on Mission St. Text in morning, "Preach the word;" evening, "What is truth?" Both excellent discourses; and highly appreciated. 150 present in the morning; 250 present at night. Mrs. Fassett will preach same place, next Sunday morning and evening.

Eld. Fassett is in Vallejo. Protracted meetings are to be held there during the week.

The Seventh-day movement in San Francisco appears to be in an easy dying condition.

Constable's argument is being heard from in this city—in several influential quarters. I met a man yesterday who one year ago was a leading Spiritualist. I incidentally asked him how his rappers were getting along, when he proclaimed his disenthrallment: "Oh! Grant knocked that doctrine out of my head, and I'm satisfied from reading Constable that the elder was right about the sleep of the dead, altogether. There should be a cheap edition of Constable printed, with other similar works, of American authorship advertised on the covers. A.

"Doctrine of Immortality."

I have now read this work, by J. H. Whitmore, sufficiently to form a very high opinion of its candor, and fair and able presentation of the subject in hand. Some of the author's views I regard as objectionable, but on the subject of man's nature and final destiny he is clearly in harmony with enlightened reason and the oracles of divine truth. He is faithful in dealing with facts, clear as a sunbeam in the statement of his premises, and most fair and logical in his conclusions.

I do not believe education and skill can endow any man with ability to break the chain of his argument and establish the reverse of his judgment.

I hope the work will be given to the public by thousands and tens of thousands until the last vestige of the incorrect dogmas of natural immortality and endless misery are among the absurdities that were.

Light is dispelling the night of error. The fogs and mists of human superstition are being dissipated by the faithful handling of the word of divine truth, and the unperverted application of human reason and the conscience.

The development of the age and the phenomena manifest in the history of doctrines show conclusively that there must be a reconstruction, or unbelief in its varied forms will be jubilant of victory. The question being settled, that Jesus the Christ is the resurrection and the life—the giver of immortality to all the worthy—the next question of greatest importance is when has been, is, or will, immortality be swallowed up of life eternal? This is a legitmate them for THE TIMES. Keep it before the people.

Sermon.

BY ELD. C. C. MARSTON.

When will the saints be rewarded?[*]

This is a perfectly legitimate inquiry. Christians have a perfect right to know whether they are to be rewarded at death or not till the resurrection, providing the knowledge can be found in the word of God. We turn to the teachings of this sacred book for light on this subject. Does the Bible teach that the saints are rewarded at death? This question answered and every sincere seeker after the "truth as it is in Jesus" will be free from the shackles of modern theology and able to think for self. I know we hear a great deal in these days about "going to heaven at death" &c., but, does the Bible teach any such doctrine? I claim that it does not and submit the following arguments as proof:

1. The Bible represents man's state between death and resurrection as a state of unconsciousness, hence he can not while in this state receive his reward.

Do not become offended at this statement; if we cannot sustain it by inspiration we are willing to give it up. And every one must see that if death is a state of unconsciousness man cannot be rewarded until he comes out of it. Let us see what the word of the Lord says concerning the condition of the dead. Eccl. 9: 10: Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest.

Here we have brought to view the condition of the dead by the expressive Hebrew word sheol. This word in the Old Testament and hades in the New represent the same things. Are the people who dwell in hades or sheol conscious? Consult the text. It says there is "no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom" in that dark abode of the dead called sheol, and then confidently adds that this is man's abode while in death—"whither thou goest!" This is the decision of inspiration on this subject—do you accept of it? There certainly can be no consciousness in a state where there is no "work, device, knowledge or wisdom!" Hence man can not be rewarded until he leaves the domain of death.

Ps. 146: 4: His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. This shows that death kills men intellectually as well as physically. Men's "thoughts perish" when they die, hence in death they cannot think and are therefore unconscious. Modern theology tells us that men just begin to think when they die. Which shall we believe, man-made theories, or inspired truth? If death kills the intellectual as well as physical part of man (and it most surely does or David was sadly in error) then certainly man is not a fit subject to be rewarded while in death. He cannot think, hence has no intelligence.

Ps. 115: 17: The dead praise not the Lord neither any that go down into silence. How does this agree with the funeral sermons that are preached in this age? Do not our modern divines tell us that our dear friends are in heaven, praising God around his throne? I ask again, now does such preaching agree with the above passage of Holy Writ? The Bible declares that "the dead praise not the Lord," theologians say "the dead praise the Lord continually." Which will you believe?

Eccl. 9: 5; "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward." Here we are explicitly informed in so many words that the "dead know not anything," therefore we must conclude that their condition is that of unconsciousness. If they were rewarded would they not know it? And if they knew that there would be one thing of which they would have knowledge, and hence it could not be said of them they know not anything.

There are many passages which teach that in death man sleeps. Is a man conscious while wrapt in the silence of sound sleep? If in sleep we are unconscious and the Bible represents death as a sleep, then certainly in death men are unconscious. How manifestly absurd it is to suppose that dead men are live men, that sleeping persons are awake!

1 Thes. 4: 13–15: "But I would not have you ignorant brethren concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him, etc.

Acts 7: 60. Stephen, in death fell asleep. Ps. 13: 3: "Lighten mine eyes lest I sleep the sleep of death." Dan. 12: 2: "Many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." See also, 1 Cor. 15: 51; 1 Thes. 5: 10; Mat. 9: 24; John 11: 11; Mark 5: 39; Luke 8: 52; Mat. 27: 52; 1 Cor. 15: 20; 2 Pet. 3: 4; 1 Cor. 15: 6–18.

We conclude that enough Bible testimony has been presented to prove beyond the reach of successful cavil that man in death is unconscious. With the proving of this fact we have established the validity of our first argument. There is no reward at death for man, because death unfits him to receive his reward by making him unconscious and putting him to sleep. In this great fact we see the need of a resurrection to life—without it man will never get his reward.

My second argument that men are not rewarded at death is as follows:

2. Reward cannot be given until the judgment: that is, man cannot be rewarded until he is judged; but the judgment does not take place until the resurrection; therefore man is not rewarded between death and the resurrection.

Is the first premise of this argument true? I think all will admit that it is true. I think it would be a piece of consummate folly to give a man his reward and then arraign him before the judge to see if his case had been properly disposed of. It would be much like hanging a man until he is dead and then trying his case to see whether he deserved hanging or not. Judgment must precede reward. None who wish to treat this subject fairly will for a moment controvert this point. There must be a rendition of the sentence before we can receive the reward. This sentence is a very important part of the judgment. It is therefore useless to talk about men being rewarded this side of the day in which they will be judged. With this understanding of the matter, if we can settle by divine testimony the time of the judgment, we can with the same evidence decide the time of reward.

What say the Scriptures? How readest thou? Without a thus saith the Lord our theories are of no avail. We therefore wish to inquire, What location does inspiration give to the judgment? This question properly disposed of, a very important argument will be established on the reward question. If the Bible locates the judgment at death, then we shall of necessity be compelled to concede that the time of reward is at death, also; but if Holy Writ decides that the judgment does not take place until the last day, or at the resurrection, then we think it must be conceded by all fair disputants that the giving of reward will also be postponed until that time.

We find a very graphic description of the judgment, including its chronological location, in the Savior's great discourse as recorded in Mat. 25, to which I first invite attention: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand but the goats on the left."

This locates the judgment at the coming of Christ. Other passages like the following harmonize fully with the above: Acts 17: 31: "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained." Jude 14: 15: "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment." 2 Tim. 4: 1: "The Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." Much more testimony might be given, but enough has been produced to fix the time of judgment beyond the reach of an honest cavil. Men will not be judged until Jesus comes. There has been appointed a day for the judgment. That day is "the last day." It is beyond the dark shades of sheol. Death and hades shall deliver up all the inhabitants thereof, and these together with those whose fortune has been not to enter that dreary abode shall be judged. This is the Bible location of the judgment.

These incidental arguments drawn from man's state in death and the location of the judgment seem to settle incontrovertibly the time of reward as not being at death but at the resurrection, but we have stronger proof than all this and will now consider it.

3. The Bible most explic[illegible] many words locates the tim[illegible] at the resurrection.

Luke 14: 14: "Thou sha[illegible] be recompensed at the resurrection [illegible] the just." Rom. 2: 6–16: "Who w[illegible]nder to every man according to his deeds: to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life (God will give); but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil;....in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel." Rev. 22: 12: "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Ps. 17: 15: "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." 1 Pet. 5: 4: "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 2 Tim. 4: 8: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown—which the Lord, shall give at that day; and not to me only but unto all them that love his appearing." Col. 3: 4: "When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Mat. 16: 27: "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father and then shall he reward every man." Rev. 11: 18: "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and that the time of the dead that they should be judged, and thou shouldest give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name small and great. 1 Pet. 1: 13: "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Tit. 2: 13: "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Jas. 5: 7, 8: "Be patient therefore brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient; establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Please turn back and give these passages a careful re-reading, accompanied by earnest prayer, and see if you can find any assurance of reward at death. They most conclusively locate the reward at the judgment. Do you receive this truth? The above array of Scripture of course does not harmonize with the popular creeds of this age, and if you endorse the doctrine taught in the one you must discard the other. Which will you choose, popular theology or the Bible? The latter says the prophets even will not receive their reward until the judgment (Rev. 11: 18.); but what does theology say? It laughs at the idea of the ancient prophets being in an unrewarded condition. Yet it is clearly taught by the word of the Lord. Again I ask, which will you believe? With the Bible doctrine of the time of reward so clearly set before us, what must become of Orthodoxy's pet dogma, the immortal soul? Certainly if man has an immortal soul that goes at death either to unending felicity, or irretrievable wo, then it must follow that he is rewarded at death, which claim is in direct opposition to all the foregoing plain Scripture testimony. The fact is, if the Bible is true man dies and continues in hades until the resurrection, when he comes forth and receives his reward. Hades is the silent abode of unconscious dead men!

Advent Christian Times.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 5, 1871.

WE have paid off some $300 of our debt within a few weeks, besides $60 in interest. About one third the amount necessary to cancel this unpleasant burden has been pledged. Shall we have pledges for the rest—and soon?

TO THE BRETHREN IN MICHIGAN I would say be patient. Unavoidable engagements have detained me from you longer than I expected. So soon as I can, I shall be among you, hoping to impart some spiritual gift, and help and strength, as the Lord may give me his Spirit and grace. J. V. H.

THE new fields in Arkansas, and Southern Illinois, where Conferences and churches have just been organized have need of some help in the way of books and tracts. They are really needy and deserving. Let them be assisted without delay. The field is open and promising for good.

THERE have been some questions proposed for answer through THE TIMES, the subjects of which will be fully discussed in our debate with Eld. Braden, to commence the first week in the New Year. Correspondents will therefore understand that they are not neglected; but their queries will be fully answered in due time.

As much is said about entire consecration, we want to ask every body if it is possible to be a child of God on other conditions than entire consecration? Has he any half consecrated, or one third, or three-fourths consecrated children? We think not. Is he not a jealous God? Will he allow any division in our affections? We never so understood it. Wholly the Lord's shou'd be the motto of every professed child of God.

WE quote from a couple of Baptist papers an article upon the 'Blessed Hope.' As is quite often the case when the orthodox discourse upon this subject, it closes with a bid for popularity in a fling against "fanatics' who "set the time." It is high time it was understood that not a tithe of the fanaticism has been manifested in connection with the doctrine of personal advent, that has occurred in connection with various theories of his spiritual coming. The "Fifth Monarchy men," the Anabaptists of Luther's day, the Mormons, the Shakers are specimens of spiritualizing-theory fanaticism.

PERSONAL.

As we go to press, a telegram has reached this office for the Editor, informing him that his son Edwin, at Winona, Minn., is not expected to live. We desire the prayers of all in this time of affliction. W. L. H.

OUR WORK HINDERED.

He is a fortunate man in the Western country to whom the Chicago fire has not been in one way or other a detriment. Our own work has been much hindered by it. The plates of one new tract were destroyed, with the only stereotype foundry accessible to us. There is an establishment in Detroit, but its charges are so unreasonably large that we cannot patronize it. The Chicago concern is doing the best it can, getting in new machinery, etc. But every one can see the advantage its city customers have over us; in the fact that they can run in every day to press their own cause, which we cannot do. Several tracts, and our Almanac, particularly, are delayed from this cause.

Again, it is difficult to procure paper. Such an enormous quantity was burned in the city, and so many mills have been destroyed that it is difficult to get orders filled at all. Fortunately, we laid in a good stock for THE TIMES just previous to the fire; else we should have been compelled to ship it from the East.

We are promised, however, some book paper and plates after this week. We shall then get out editions of Dr. Field's Debate; of Collin's Address, and on the Rich Man and Lazarus; Fassett on Phil. 1:21–25; and of some of Sheldon's late works. We beg our friends to be patient. We are doing the best we can under the circumstances.

A DISCUSSION.

As heretofore announced, with the New Year we shall commence a written discussion with Eld. Clark Braden, of the Disciple church, and late President of the Christian College of Southern Illinois, involving the questions of the nature of man and the future punishment. The debate will consist of an article from each of the parties engaged, in each paper, for about six months—i. e., an affirmative article and the reply to it, will be published in each number.

We trust none of our friends will fail to call attention to this fact. Let the ministry mention it in the pulpit; and let our readers speak of it to their neighbors—that one of the ablest debaters in the Disciple church is to urge the ablest modern arguments against Adventism; that they will be published in an Advent paper—THE ADVENT TIMES, with such defense as the editor of that sheet may be able to make.

It is becoming more and more apparent that a periodical—a weekly or even monthly journal—is one of the best means of propagating Bible truths, or, indeed, any opinions. The powers that govern the forces of evil understand this, and are not slow to improve the advantages the printing press offers them. Let us emulate their zeal and foresight, but in a better cause. Send the paper containing this discussion far and wide. Send it to your friends, at your own expense, as well as try to induce others to subscribe on their own account. Call their attention to the fact that for one dollar only they can obtain, beside much other valuable reading matter, one of the most important debates in the history of Adventism. Talk about the matter. Wake up an interest. You will by so doing help the paper, help the cause in your own section, and also in the field at large.

We have ordered a lot of better paper than we have ever yet used for THE TIMES, in the expectation that with this and other additional features of interest, our subscription list would be so increased as to warrant the increased expense.

Single copy, for six months, -	$1.00
Six copies, all to one address, -	5.00
Ten " " " " -	7.50

One copy for three months (on trial), 35 cents. But we can no longer prepay the postage, at that rate. Those desiring the postage pre-paid must remit 40 cents.

We shall not spend all our energies upon the discussion, nor fill the paper with it. It will occupy only a reasonable amount of space; and the other departments will be kept up, we trust, with more interest than ever before.

An Important Admission.

Henry Dunn of England, the author of Restorationist theory of the gospel, in a letter to a friend explanatory of his new theory says:

> "Had the Jews received the Savior, ancient predictions would have found a literal and immediate fulfillment; the kingdom of heaven would then have been developed; that the Israelitist people as the elect nation would have at once become the rulers and teachers of the world; that Christ would have subdued every foe, and death would have been 'swallowed up in victory.'
> "What we call 'the Christian Dispensation'—a period never referred to by the prophets—is a consequence of the rejection of the Messiah by the Jews; overruled indeed by God, as every thing else is, for the accomplishment of his great designs but not so to speak forming a part of the divine purpose as revealed in the seers of the Old Testament. It is vain to deny that God's decrees are often made contingent upon man's conduct."

If these views are correct then what becomes of Daniel's prophecy of the four great empires as antecedent to the setting up of the kingdom of heaven? What will be done with the prophecy of the little horn, and his wonderful power and warfare upon the saints of the Most High, and his supremacy for 1260 years before the appearing of God's everlasting kingdom? Had the Jews received the Messiah then, how could Is. ch. 53 have been fulfilled? According to Mr. Dunn, these prophecies, with many others, concerning the death burial and resurrection of Christ were contingent upon his reception or rejection by the Jewish nation. If this principle be sound and scriptural, it follows that many prophecies with regard to the glory and prosperity of fleshly Israel were conditional, and as they never complied with the conditions, they will never be fulfilled.

To a certain extent national blessings are dependent on conditions; and if the Jewish people are amenable to these conditions, then they must conform to them if they would enjoy the promised blessings.

In Jer. 17: 7–10, the rule is laid down governing the divine administration in the dispensation of national blessings. It is as follows:—

> "At what instant I shall speak concerning a kingdom to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it, if that nation, against whom I have pronounced turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom to build and to plant it, if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice then will I repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them."

Apply the law to the Jews and what is the use of contending for their restoration and a hundred other things believed and insisted on by the "Age to come" brethren as a part and a parcel of the gospel of the kingdom? All the promises in the last eight chapters of Ezekiel are conditional; they depend upon an "if;" and as the Jewish nation never did what was required of them the prophecy with all it promises has failed of accomplishment; and will forever fail, as the time in which they could have complied with the conditions has long since past. Nothing can be more absurd than the idea that God has special national blessings for the Jews which he intends to bestow upon them unconditionally. N. FIELD.

Evening Talks With My Neighbors.—No. 3.

NOTE. In the last article of this series, No. 2, a portion of the quotation from an immaterialist work was omitted by the printer. Reason, reflection, perception and memory should have been added as faculties of the mind, making it read: "Mind is divisible into ten parts....the internal are reason, reflection, perception, memory and judgment."—ED.

Doctor. Good evening Mr. L. I would like to talk further upon the evidences of Christianity, if agreeable to you.

L. With the greatest pleasure, Doctor. And as you know in your practice you always take a diagnosis of a case, then prescribe, so I first wish to ask whether or no the Christian religion is from God or not.

D. Certainly. That is it. And as I have noticed, Adventists reason the Bible, not mystify it.

L. Adventists take the ground that it is the duty of philosophers to make plain cases of puzzles and not puzzles of plain cases.

D. That is it, in a nutshell.

L. Then in the language of the Jews, "If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." (John ch. 10.) His answer, notice Dotor, how reasonable: "If I do not the work of my Father, believe me not." He asks no one to believe without evidence. And, as John says (ch. 21), "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." So you see he had these things written that you might believe and get life through Jesus Christ. Did you notice Doctor that he does not say that you might go to heaven and keep out of eternal misery! It is life, life,—the opposite is death.

D. Then you think that death is the doom of the sinner.

L. No sir, I do not think so, I know it. That is the difference between Adventists and orthodoxy—who believe that to die is to live, and live is to die: and their theory is partly true and partly false.

D. How is that?

L. Those that die have the promise of being brought to life, when comes the resurrection of both the just and the unjust, but it is false that men live the next minute after they stop breathing.

D. I am satisfied on that point: but what is the penalty for sin?

L. Death, the highest penalty known in God's or human laws. Now as Jesus paid the penalty—it was a full payment—otherwise it is only partly paid.

D. Well, if I could only know that there ever was such a person as Jesus on the earth!

L. Jesus said—"The works that I do, they bear witness of me. (John 6: 30; 10: 25.)

On another occasion he called up his miracles (Mat. 11: 5): "The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up." In John 3: 2, Nicodemus says to Jesus—"We know thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do the miracles that thou doest except God be with him."

D. Will you give us some outside testimony.

L. Well, the first is, that an embassador must show credentials properly attested. If not signs of seals it must be signs of miracles.

D. To be plain then, how do you know there was a Christ? Did you see him, or did you ever see any one that did?

L. How do we know there was a Napoleon, Josephus, Titus, Cæsar, Cicero, Demosthenes, etc. Did you ever see London? The Quakers answer is to the point right here—The Quaker asked the infidel, after the infidel had asked him if he ever had seen Christ—Have you any brains?—"Yes." How dost thee know, didst thee ever see them?

L. How do you know arsenic is poison, Doctor?

D. By testimony.

L. How do you know bread is nutritious?

D. By experience.

L. Men, then, learn that arsenic is poison by testimony,—for no one would take a dose to try it. And in this way we prove that miracles establishing the Christian religion were wrought 1800 years ago by Christ and his apostles: by testimony only.

D. You claim that Christ proved his divinity by miracles?

L. Certainly. He could not have been an imposter, for the Jews expected a temporal Messiah, and if he had been an imposter he would have conformed to the views of the people.—Would an imposter assume a different character from the ideas of the people, and thus frustrate his own plans, and cause his shame and ignominious death?

D. Well, that does seem conclusive.

L. Yes, Christ did not conform to their desires and ideas—and thus proved his Messiahship.

D. Call again, I am getting interested in this Christ. J. S. LAWYER.

Universalism—Almost.

My old friend George Storrs is considerably flurried by the article which appeared in THE TIMES a few weeks ago, in which I stated that he and Eld. Blain had espoused the views of one Henry Dunn of England which in my judgment amounted almost to "Universalism." What I said was on the authority of Eld. Blain, who says, in his new book p. 188, that Geo. Storrs agrees with Mr. Dunn in every thing he teaches except in some few minor points. He speaks very highly of Geo. Storrs' new tract of seventy-two pages, on the oath and promise of God to Abraham, as an admirable production. In this tract Geo. Storrs' proves to his own satisfaction, I suppose, that every human being from the first to the last son and daughter of Adam must, at some time, have the offer of salvation; and that in such a way that they cannot misunderstand its conditions. In order to this they must have infallible teachers. All then, who have lived and died in ignorance of the gospel must be raised from the dead and have probation in the age to come, in which time they will not be misled by false or incompetent preachers. With the light they will have, but few will reject Christ, but on the other hand the mass will be saved. None but the wilful rejectors of Christ will perish. Instead of a few being saved in comparison to the great mass of mankind who have lived or are living on the earth there will be but few lost!!

This is quite a revolution in the sentiments of these venerable students and teachers of the Bible. At the eleventh hour they have made the discovery that they have all their lifetime been groping in darkness and teaching falsehoods. More than half a century has been spent in misrepresenting God's dealings with our race!! But now the light dawns upon their benighted minds and they see clearly that God's ways are equal!!!

For years Geo. Storrs made the non-resurrection of the wicked a subject of special discussion, in a paper published for that object professing to believe that it was as plainly taught in the Bible as that Christ died for sinners! Now he is just as certain that it is an egregious mistake!! He turns a complete summersault, and comes down at a right about face, and flies off on a tangent to undo the work of a lifetime, and prove that the antediluvians, the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, the Assyrians, Egyptians, Philistines, Canaanites, Moabites, cum multes allis, must come up again to have an offer of eternal life. The preaching of Noah, Lot and the prophets, was not sufficient to leave them without excuse, and justify God in condemning them with an overthrow!

Well, truly, this is a fast age—a wonderful age. All sorts of things taught by all sorts of people—every thing in the wind, nothing settled, nothing certain. Lo here! lo there! Anarchy, confusion and destruction in church and state, build up one day and pull down the next. Day of extreme views in religion; ultraisms, hobbies speculations notions and opinions insisted on as meat in due season, and to be believed.

In this extraordinary state of things, better for the mass of people in Christian lands to wait for infallible exponents of the gospel in the age to come than run the risk of being deceived by errorists in this. Such it seems to me will be the effect of Mr. Dunn's new doctrine. N. FIELD.

The Blessed Hope.

The second personal advent of Christ, with all the events attendant upon and resulting from it was, without question, the hope of the ancient church in all ages since the ascension, except the present. Whitby, who introduced the spiritualizing method, which alas, has now become so general, is free to confess that the literal personal advent and reign of Christ, on this earth, was the faith of every orthodox Christian for the first sixteen centuries of the Christian era. Alford, whose Critical Commentary on the New Testament is the most masterly production of the age, and places him in the front rank of expositors, says, "The Lord will come in person to this earth; his risen elect will reign here with him. This is my firm persuasion, and not mine alone, but that of Christ's waiting people, as it was that of his primitive apostolical church, before controversy blinded the eyes of the fathers to the light of prophecy." For the last century, owing to the pernicious teachings of Whitby, this truly apostolical doctrine has found no place in the symbols of our churches. It is seldom treated but to be mistreated and prejudiced, in the estimation of devout and intelligent Christians. What pastor has in the last ten years taken up the prophecies of Daniel and of Jesus and explained them to his people in a series of discourses? How, few, how very few, of even our ministers have any well defined theory of prophetical exposition?

We were delighted last Sabbath evening to hear one of a series of lectures on the unfulfilled prophecies, as bearing upon the second advent, which Bro. Tichenor is delivering to his church. It was listened to with the most rapt attention. He adopts the pre-millennial theory, and we believe the correct one.

The following from the Christian Era fully expresses our convictions:

"If anything is clearly revealed in the Scriptures, it is that Christ is a second time to visit this earth in person. How else can the words of the angels to the apostles be interpreted—"This Jesus, who was taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye saw him going into heaven?" It is not some one who represents him, as the Holy Spirit, but "this Jesus," the very person whom they saw ascending into heaven, he is the one that is to come again, and in a form visible to the senses. This fact is very frequently referred to, not indirectly, but in the most express terms, in other parts of the New Testament; so frequently that, as is stated by those who have duly examined, one verse out of every thirty-six in the New Testament, and one out of every twenty-four in the Epistles, refer to this event. This is certainly very remarkable, and should awaken the inquiry in every Christian heart, Have I given to this doctrine that place in my theology, in my heart, among the inspiring motives of my life, which the Scriptures so evidently assign to it? Certainly Christain pulpits do not now exhibit it as did the apostles. In our prayer-meetings it is not often alluded to, either in prayer, exhortation or song. At the Lord's supper it is scarcely thought of or alluded to, though our Savior, in instituting this ordinance, and enjoining it upon his disciples, was careful to refer to his second advent—"till I come." In our nymn-books we have had scarce an allusion, certainly few or no stanzas especially devoted to it; and we deem it worthy of special notice that, in this respect, "The service of song" is a remarkable exception from the general rule, in furnishing many beautiful hymns upon this very subject.

Is it not time that we came back to apostolic practice, and thought of, and rejoiced in, and spoke of, our blessed Lord's second coming? The theme is certainly inspiring, and well adapted to cultivate love to Christ and his cause. It is full of comfort and hope amid the conflicts and sorrows and confusions of the world. How near it helps to bring Christ, to think of him as still belonging to this earth, as only gone away for a season, and as to come again to make all things new. The time of his advent may be near or distant—that is, hidden from us—but he may come any moment, so far as we know; and therefore it should lead us to be always ready to meet him.

The wild fanaticisms which have from time to time brought this doctrine into disrepute, especially the fixing of exact times and seasons, surely ought not to make it distasteful to the true disciple of Christ. Are we not to "look for" and to "love his appearing?" Is not this attitude of expectant waiting and welcome said to be characteristic of Christ's true followers?—Baptist.

The Austrian Empire.

The retirement of Count Von Beust from the Premiership of the Austrian Cabinet is fraught with more grave consequences than we at first feared. It is the triumph of a policy that is likely to prove one of disintegration and death. The centrifugal force of the Empire far exceeds the centripetal. Prostrated by sudden and overwhelming defeats—though under the wise measures of the Chancellor it rallied for a season—it lacks true recuperative energy, because it lacks cohesive power and organic life. When he came to the management of affairs four years ago, Austria was on the verge of ruin; and he might have said, with the elder Pitt, "This country can be saved, and I am the only man that can do it." If he now resigns in despair, or if the first act of the patient, on recovering a little strength, is to dismiss the physician, there is little hope of recovery.

To know what he accomplished, we must remember that, on the close of the war with Prussia, Austria had lost her prestige and place among the Great Powers. Her subjects were discontented. Her finances were disordered. Hungary was on the verge of revolt. External disasters had only prepared the way for worse internal evils. Every token appeared of collapse and civil war. The Chancellor's great qualities then shone forth that had been hid as in a mine. They glowed the brighter for adversity. They showed the best on a dark ground. They rose with the gigantic difficulties to be overcome. He proved equal to the occasion. He recognized the autonomy of Hungary; and chronic discontent was changed into devoted loyalty. He abolished the Concordat, and freedom of conscience was enjoyed in the most Catholic country of Europe. With every provocation to engage in the late terrible war, he suppressed all private animosity for the sake of the public good, and maintained a neutrality acknowledged by all parties to be honorable and just. Worn out by his incessant labors, he might have then been allowed now to retire from his post with the satisfaction of knowing that the policy he so successfully inaugurated was firmly established.

But the Federalists, who have now come into power, not only plan to pull down his work and build a house upon the sand, but to construct it of sand. The "United States of Austria," which they propose, would have five or six dozen Ministers in power; with as many different policies as states. Bohemia claims a constitution and king of her own. The compromise of making the Emperor of Austria King of Bohemia, she would only resent as a usurpation. Lower Austria and Carinthia are ready to follow the lead of Prussia. The Sclaves feel an elective affinity for Russia. Thus may there at any moment, and by the slightest occasion, be inauguasted a war of races.

The attempt to create a nationality on a solid and just basis has been opposed from without and within. Germany and the German element in Austria—especially in Bohemia—have exhausted every means to defeat this consolidation. The Bohemians desire to have nothing in common with the other parts of this composite Empire but the war, finances and foreign affairs, and are in no case to be depended on. Von Beust opposed the Federal policy in his government of Bohemia, knowing that the Germans, who have large majorities in certain sections of that state, are under Bismarck's influence, and might vote civil war and Prussian intervention. The Prussian Chancellor would be glad to Prussianize all the German speaking races of Europe; and with Bohemia once his he would hardly stop short of Vienna. With the only man who was his match no longer the champion of Austria, it is hard to see how that Empire can withstand his unscrupulous and artful policy. And the overthrow of Austria would prepare the way for changes in Eastern Europe more startling than the west ever witnessed.—Montreal Witness.

Russia and Austria.

People in both hemispheres have come to consider a great European war as one of the probabilities of the immediate future. The existence of such a belief is perhaps the best argument that could be adduced in favor of the possibility of the event itself. Such an opinian may be partly due to the ground-swell of excitement which followed the termination of the Franco-German struggle. On the other hand, the surprising revolution in the relative strength of European nations, which that war brought about, has been the means of exciting the ambition of some and stimulating the fears of others. It has had the further effect of showing that the possession of a perfect military machine is a very indispensable requisite to national greatness in Europe, and, indeed, is the only sure guarantee of national existence. Before France threw down her rash challenge to Germany, the attitude of European powers to each other was that of an armed peace—hardly less expensive than war. Since the capitulation of Paris, the mailed glove has not been drawn off; in fact the tendency has been to make the national arms stronger and more impenetrable. All this is very deplorable, no doubt, and is exactly the reverse of what many good people expected. Seeing that it exists, however, it is hardly to be wondered at if little international difficulties in the Old World have been very uneasily watched of late. When nations vie with each other in perfecting their machinery of slaughter, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the desire of using these edged tools may be developed very much in proportion to the time and money spent in grinding them.

Keeping in view such considerations, a cable dispatch about the military preparations of Russia reads rather less absurdly than it otherwise might do. The connection between the appointment of Count Andrassy as head of the Imperial Council of Austria, and the formation by Russia of two vast fortified camps, may not strike the ordinary reader as being particularly obvious. The fact that Andrassy is a Hungarian, and fought in 1848 for the national autonomy of his country, may not greatly help to elucidate the mystery. When it is further remembered however, that of the fifteen millions of population in the kingdom of Hungary, there are only a little over five millions of the dominant Maygar race, the remainder being mostly of Sclavonic origin, and, therefore, natural allies of Russia, it will be understood that while the policy of Austria is controlled by a Hungarian it must be hostile to the eastern policy of her northern neighbor. As a well-informed correspondent puts it:

"Of all Austrian provinces, not one has a greater interest in the pursuit of an anti-Russian policy than Hungary. The very existence of Hungary is based upon her antagonism to Russia. Should the Sclaves on the Balkan peninsula ever attain the dominant position Russia avowedly endeavors to procure them, the Sclaves in the neighboring kingdom of Hungary are sure likewise to proceed from words to to action and will forcibly remonstrate against the rule of a Maygar minority. On no one point are the Maygars of all parties so entirely agreed as on the necessity of their interfering should Russia ever attempt to realize her Oriental designs. To prepare for this contingency, an alliance has been entered into between leading members of the Maygar and Polish nobility, whose object is to operate conjointly against Russia at a given moment. This connection dates from the time after Sedan, when the Poles ceased to rely upon France, and were too glad to avail themselves of Maygar overtures."

Of course, the cable dispatch and the opinion we have quoted represent merely the political speculation of the time. The fact that all this speculation is so restless and bold in character is perhaps more alarming than the immediate subject with which it deals. Had Napoleon III. not been sustained by the almost entire public opinion of France, in so far, at least, as it found articulate expression, his declaration of war against Germany would have been so much idle breath. It had become a fixed impression in France and Germany that they must fight each other some day, and it was as much a mutual relief as anything else, to find that the time of suspense was at an end. In the same way, it is becoming in Central and Eastern Europe a fixed idea that Russia is going to take an early opportunity of absorbing, by federation or otherwise, the kindred populations that lie upon her southern frontier. Probably civilization might gain from such a process, even were it to be pushed so far as to drive Mohammedan rule out Europe. But certainly, the Austro-Hungarian Empire would go to pieces in the event of any such advance of Russia. Nor could Germany safely stand by and see such a consummation, unless she were permitted to make such sweeping annexation on the Baltic and the North Sea as would drive all Europe into arms. When Russia will show her hand is rather an open question. She may have made Andrassy's elevation the occasion of beginning some extra preparations for future war, but it is exceedingly probable that these fortified camps are merely part of a huge plan which is as yet far from being perfect. Besides, Count Andrassy, strong as he is in Pesth, is not so strong in Vienna as Count Beust was, and may any day yield to the same pressure which drove out his predecessor. The uneasy relations between Russia and Austria will continue all the same, however, and unforseen circumstances may at any time lend them a new feature of danger to the world.—N. Y. Times.

" " " Reports reach us of the breaking out of a volcano on Camiguin, an island of the Phillipine group, about thirty miles in circumference. As usual the eruption was preceded by violent earthquake shocks. On May 1st a crevice opened in the earth more than a quarter of a mile long, and smoke, ashes, and earth were ejected. As night drew on this opening developed itself into a fierce and terrific volcano, pouring out burning lava on all sides. About 150 deaths are recorded out of the population of 25,000. Almost all have deserted the island, and sought safety in the adjacent Phillipines. These constantly recurring evidences of the mass of our planet being in a molten state, and of the thinness of its outer crust, make the slight shocks of earthquake which we occasionally feel quite suggestive. It 's not a particularly reassuring thought that in these strange "shake," we are feeling through our thin floor of solid earth the surging of angry waves of fire. Such is the startling fact, and we may take what comfort we can from the probability that it is gradually growing cooler, and not the reverse.

" " " There has been a vexed question in England, and perhaps America, as to the number of Spiritualists in the latter country. The census takes no account of them, and estimates vary rather widely. In New England they told him there were but few there, but plenty in the West. In the West they said he must go East for them. In Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, his informants apologized for the small number that way, but told him there were plenty in the States; while in Boston it was held that they were thickest in the Territories. Individual estimates vary from two hundred thousand to thirteen millions; Hepworth Dixon, three millions; A. J. Davis, who counts, perhaps, by clairvoyance, 4,230,000; Warren Chase, eight millions; Catholic Council at Baltimore, between ten and eleven millions. Mr. Tebb, after a wide and serious investgiation, believes that there are in the Eastern States three per cent. of Spiritualists; Middle and Western, two per cent.; Southern States and the Territories, a portion of one per cent., making a Spiritualist population, including the children of belivers, of 660,000. This is so much less formidable a number than has been represented, that its publication ought to remove many gloomy apprehensions.

Hypocrisy—some stir; we may say active. Drunkenness—much offered and a good deal taken. Recklessness in demand. Foolishness—much in the market, and considerable quantities taken at high prices. Something doing in overtrading. Promises, not intended to be kept, plenty. Honesty firm, but at low prices. Usury rather flat. Extortion flat, also. Covetousness, more fatal than cholera, increasing."

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SATURDAY, Nov. 11. Came to Memphis and put up with Eld. R. Talley, agent of the African Methodists, who now occupy our chapel. I was welcomed and made very comfortable. I could not get the Court House, and so shall spend the Sunday with the Freedmen.

SABBATH, Nov. 12. In the morning prayer meeting we talked over the trials of the church, and also its comforts and joys, and offered prayer for help. I also read to them an excellent letter from Br. Leslie to Eld. McHaney. The church, few in numbers and poor in this world, cling together and to the blessed hope, and keep up their meetings.

Br. Persons called, and went with me to South Memphis, I was welcomed by Eld. Tyler and attended their Sabbath school, and then preached to his people. They still meet in the old Pine six school house, but are building a good brick chapel, and mean to succeed. It was in this part of the city that I met with the colored people on my first visit to Memphis. Then the land was covered with shanties, and the colored people were crowded in this part of the city. Those shanties are now removed, and the multitude is scattered. And the immoralities, and corruption of their community have mostly ceased. They now have fewer but a better people. No frequent murders or robberies now, as before. There is also a great change in the Sabbath school. Then none could read. Now nearly all can, and, also, sing from the note book, instead of the old plantation songs and tunes by rote.

In the p. m., I attended the Sabbath school of the Freedmen in Avery chapel in Gayoso St. It is very large, having some six hundred scholars all able to read.

I spoke at 3 a. m., on the subject of peace, to a large audience. At night I spoke in the Advent chapel. We had a good time on the kingdom. Things ahead look bright. The kingdom is soon coming.

What a change in the condition of the Freedmen since I first came to Memphis, nearly six years ago. I can hardly realize it. There is great improvement. Education has done the work. Moral, Christian and secular education has raised them out of the depths of ignorance, and many of them from sin.

I have been pained at heart by the death of one of Dr. Leslie's scholars—a noble young man, and a Christian—Sterling Southall. He died suddenly, but was ready, and talked of death and parting with Christian calmness, warning all to be ready to meet Christ in peace. He left a blessed testimony, and sleeps in Jesus. He was so useful, and promising that it seemed almost impossible to be reconciled to his death. But God doeth all things well. His parents, Br. Madison Southall and wife, are comforted with the blessed hope.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 14. Arrived safely at Cairo, Ill. and then with the speed we get this side of Dixie, came in a hurry to Anna some forty miles, where Elds. Childs, Thomassen and Dr. Goyer met and warmly greeted me at the depot. How pleasant and blessed is Christian sympathy. I am again among old friends at the North. But my new friends at the South are not a whit behind them in hospitality and Christian love.

At 7 p. m., I spoke to the church from Mal. 3: 16, 17. "They that feared the Lord spoke often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it." I showed that God noticed, and blessed his people in connection with their social meetings. God is specially pleased as a "book of remembrance," was kept and those even that were present, and "thought on his name," were not forgotten. The prayer and conference meeting is indispensable to growth, and success in the work of the Lord. Where regular, healthful prayer and conference meetings are kept up in the spirit of love and unity, the cause of Christ will prosper, souls will be converted, saints will be edified and built up in the truth. But where there are no regular prayer meetings there is desolation and dearth, and death.

THURSDAY, Nov. 15. To-day I got my mail, some of it three months old. This explained why I thought my friends had delayed to write, and will explain to them why I have not long since answered their letters.

At 10 a. m., in company with Brn. Childs and Goyer, rode twenty miles East to Mt. Joy. This is a wild, rough country, and what friends we have here are mostly the fruit of Br. Thomassen's labors. We now have the elements of a good Advent church. They had lately given liberally to aid in building the new Mt. Joy chapel, which is controlled by the Protestant Methodists. They have, after getting their help to build the house, shut the door against us: so we go to the school house. The leaders of this church are very bitter against us. One of their ministers a short time since, after showing what he thought to be the "never-dying soul!" dismissed the assembly as a "never-dying congregation!!" Of course he will have no more funerals to attend.

We received the hospitalities of the brothers Calhoun. At night spoke by request. I explained 1 Thes, 4: 14, showing that God brings the sleeping saints with Christ from the dead, and not from heaven, as immaterialists contend. Also upon Phil. 1: 21–23, with the Rich Man and Lazarus. We had a rich dish of Biblical criticism. I find that those who have heard Br. Thomassen attentively have been well posted. But new ones are constantly seeking light.

FRIDAY, Nov. 17. Held two services to-day, and had good attendance. Things are working well. The Lord is blessing his people. I spoke in the a. m., from Is. 44: 3–5 "I will pour water on him that is thirsty." At night from 1 John 3: 8. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." I showed that Christ would bruise the head of Satan, and extinguish him, with all evil and evil beings, from the universe at his second coming.

SATURDAY, Nov. 18. Morning sermon on baptism and its relation to the resurrection of the dead. The future life depends upon the resurrection. In the p. m. Elds. Lawver, Thomassen, and Roach arrived, and cheered us. Soon it began to rain, and poured down so heavily that we could hold no public meeting. The brethren met, however, and resolved to organize. Respectful attention was paid to the kind invitation of the Illinois Central Conference to unite with them; but they felt that there was work enough for an independent organization here, and that they must arrange for work in this part of the field. They have four preachers and several churches; and the field is open before them for enlargement, and all ripe for harvest.

SABBATH, Nov. 19. I preached to-day on the Image and on the soul. It was the first time the people had heard on these subjects in the way I treated them. There was deep and precious interest. At night I spoke on the passover supper, and the communion; after which we organized a church, embracing the substantial members of seven families. Two elders and two deacons were elected and ordained. And Eld. Thomasson was invited to preach with them as an Evangelist. We then sat down at the table and broke bread. It was one of the solemn yet happy hours that we often spend at the communion table. The deep feeling was so marked that one elder of another church said, as often as he had sat at the Lord's table, he had never witnessed anything like this before. Though the house was full, said he, "you might have heard a pin drop." The Lord was with us, and the remarks of the elders were truly edifying to all.

Thus closed our first conference in Southern Illinois. It may be proper to say here that it is but a few years since the movement on the Advent question began in this vicinity. Dr. Goyer, who resides in Jonesboro, first heard me on the Advent at the Big Tent meeting in Cincinnati, O., in 1842. He continued faithful, and let his light shine after his removal here, by which Br. Thomassen and others were brought into the faith. Br. Burr, and others, were then invited to give lectures, and soon a church was organized in Jonesboro. Then. Br. Lawver, of the Disciple church in Cobden, got hold of one of our Advent Minstrels, and on examination of the tracts and Bible references in the last part of the book, found that he had not yet got all the truth. He at once took a noble and bold stand for the Advent faith. And now the elements are prepared for a church in Cobden, Br. L. is an active and influentian citizen of Cobden, and well known throughout the country as the President of the County Agricultural Society. And being outspoken and faithful, he is greatly helping forward the good work. The cause has taken a new start. And now we have a new Conference that will not exist in name alone, but bids fair to become a power in the land.

How mysteriously things work. Seed sown in 1842, in Cincinnati, O., comes up in Southern Illinois in 1871, in a vigorous body to battle for the truth.

MONDAY, Nov. 20. Came to Anna, and soon was hurrying as fast as the cars could go toward Urbana, Ill.

TUESDAY, Nov. 21. At an early hour I called on my son Arthur, in Urbana, Ill. I found him in good health, and doing well, in the office of the I. B. & W. Railway.

THE "SCHEME OF REDEMPTION."

Having some leisure, I looked over a new work handed me by Br. Lawver, entitled "An Exposition and Defense of the Scheme of Redemption, as it is Revealed and taught in the Holy Scriptures," by R. Milligan, President of the College of the Bible, in Kentucky University.

I find this to be an able work. It illustrates and defends the scheme of the late Alex Campbell. But there is so much of truth, and valuable analysis of the plan of redemption it will help the Bible student. Two of the radical points on which we differ from the author are the 'nature of man,' and the "conversion of the world." On these questions I could trust any one of our young preachers to meet him. With the plain word of God they could with ease overthrow these dogmas advocated in this work, and make the truth shine the brighter in contrast with the Platonic philosophy, and Whitbyan fables.

In his introduction he makes the following remarks.

"In this work there is no attempt made to construct a system of any kind. This has already been done, and done perfectly, by that Spirit which searches all things, yea, even the deep counsels and purposes of Jehovah. And whatever serves to draw away the minds and hearts of the people from the honest, earnest, and prayerful study of his Divine system, whether it be in the form of a catechism, a creed, a periodical, or a newspaper, I cannot but regard as an unqualified curse to our race. But whatever, on the other hand, serves to clear away the rubbish, the mists and fogs which human traditions and speculations have thrown over and around this system; whatever serves to lead and to incline the people to study it more earnestly, comprehend it more fully, love it more ardently, and reverence it more profoundly, I cannot but regard as a great blessing to our race."

Let us note this good teaching. In doing so, I am sure we shall steer clear of some grave errors into which many Christians have fallen.

I returned home Wednesday noon, Nov. 22, in the midst of a blinding snow storm, with the mercury at zero. I thought this a cool reception after leaving the mild climate of the South. But I found the welcome just as warm and genial at my home, and office, as in other Christian homes in a milder climate. The frosts of winter do not cool the ardor of friendship and family ties.

I have been absent more than three months. Have attended many camp and conference meetings in Illinois, Iowa, Tennessee, and Arkansas. Have organized a number of churches, and two conferences, and helped prepare the way for the progress of the cause in the future. This is missionary work, and the friends I have been among most of the time have really been unable to meet my expenses. But I must keep going. It would be pleasant to at least make a comfortable visit with my family. But the calls from the poor to have the gospel preached to them press heavily. Much has been done in the past few years in the West. But more remains to be done. I shall not feel satisfied until the cause is pushed Southwest to Texas and the Gulf, with organizations even to the Pacific. I would see this done ere I sleep, unless Jesus comes to reconstruct the world. This would be more acceptable to a weary pilgrim who longs for rest, and to all who sincerely pray, "Thy kingdom come!"

Br. R. W. Wilson's Removal.

FROM THE CLINTON, IOWA, CHURCH.

Our beloved Br. R. W. Wilson who has been our pastor here since the organization of our society has concluded to remove to California, where he intends to devote his time wholly in the promulgation of the great truths of the Bible, and will proclaim to the people of the Pacific coast in his able and earnest manner the glad tidings of the second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and of the establishment of his kingdom upon this earth, of which there shall be no end.

We all deplore his departure from our midst; but what is our loss is gain to those to whom he will proclaim the word.

Br. Wilson came to this vicinity several years ago, and through his exertions in connection with Br. A. A. Phelps, succeeded in establishing a church here amid bitter sectarian persecutions. Although our society is small, yet they are all devoted to the cause and are built up on the most holy faith; and it must afford our esteemed brother exceeding pleasure to see that this little band whom he has so closely united are determined to keep together and work in the common cause of bringing others into the field who are strangers to grace and under the condemnation of sin and death. And it cannot fail to make him rejoice and feel encouraged that God has blessed his labors here so abundantly; and this will be a strong incentive to induce him to preach more boldly and fearlessly to the inhabitants of that distant land to which he goes, and will give him encouragement and assurance that his labors there wil also be crowned with success.

At our last meeting it was unanimously voted that we accept Br. Wilson's tendered resignation of this charge. We feel ourselves under lasting obligations to him for his services so faithfully rendered. May the Lord abundantly bless his labors, and when Jesus comes in all his glory, may he be found at his post giving meat in due season unto his flock, and that he may then have an abundant entrance ministered unto him into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is our prayer.

Crisis, please copy.

From John Maxim. South Carver Mass.

The doctrine advocated in THE TIMES and the Crisis is by many called infidelity; and our preachers are refused admittance into their pulpits. And their religious periodicals do not admit Adventist articles into their columns. Neither do they publish in their journals the accounts of the conversions and religious revivals among the Adventists, which so often occur. Why is this? Is it not because th fear that if the Advent doctrine is pe mitted to be "taught in their streets, men will embrace it, and thereby lesse their ranks? I asked a member of th Methodist church not long since if B S. S. Brewer might hold a meeting i their vestry some evening, and coul get no answer! Yet in the same ve try on two Sabbath evenings a Swedenborgian minister, being there, wa called upon to lead the meeting, an took part in each meeting, and was received with shouts of applause by th minister and church. Yes, the Meth dist Orthodox, Swedenborgian an Universalist can unite together to p down Adventism. But the more thi true doctrine is opposed by the pop lar church, the faster it will sprea for truth will prevail.

From Wm Branch.

About the last of July I went t Bridgeville, ten miles north of St Johns, Mich. Finding the peopl without any regular preaching, co cluded to preach to them every othe Sabbath. I learned that the place an people had been given up by two mi isters, one of whom had at anoth place publicly denounced them a "heathen." The place had borne a har name for miles around, and I think i was merited to some extent at least, fo it was said the only difference betwee Sabbath and other days was that o that day lawlessness more generall prevailed. If a minister came alon and preached, he would, perhaps, hav ten or twelve hearers, and perhaps onl six or eight. As I went there fro time to time I gained friends. Th people turned out in good number and almost every house in the plac was opened to me as a home, the tavern not excepted.

There seems to be something in th truth which "mightily convinces" th candid mind, and so it was in thi place. I have just closed a protracte meeting, in which a good number wer converted and some reclaimed and le to take a new start. I might give som interesting incidents of the meeting but one or two will suffice. One da I stepped into a harness shop, and beheld one of the most pitiable objects I have ever seen: a man curled up o the floor in a little cupboard, sleepin the deathlike sleep of the drunkard Praise the Lord! I can now take him by the hand and call him my brother, in that most blessed of all bonds, th Christian brotherhood.

Last Sunday I buried six happy one in the likeness of Christ's death, and in the evening organized a little band of seven. Others have given thei names for membership and will unite. They have prayer-meetings twice week, and last Tuesday eve. two new ones made a start in the good way. May the Lord bless them all.

I found that the people, instead o being heathen or infidels, were perishing as it were and starving for th bread of life; and the truth of God' word needed only to be set before them in its beauty and simplicity, to be received, believed, and practiced. Whe people think they already possess immortality, they are not likely to seek for it; but let them understand th great truth set forth in the Bible, i. e., obedience brings life, and disobedienc brings death—and many will seek for life.

Let us all strive to aid in advancing the cause of Christ, and bringing the lost ones back to Father's house. The last great struggle is going on between the Lord's army and the hosts of sin. Let all be found at their post faithfully giving the note of warning.

From W O Hicks, Caro, Mich.

I have just returned from a visit to the churches at Gagetown and Pigeon River. We had some blessed meetings. Truly the Lord was with us. At Gagetown we were kindly received by Br. Campbell and family, where I found Br. Durand, and learned that they had procured the Hotel Hall where I preached two nights. The Methodist brethren came in with their pastor, prejudice gave way, and all worked in harmony.

We went two miles north from here and held forth three nights, where some of the M. E. brethren came out, and said we had the truth; and the rest promised to investigate, and if it was true to accept it. I then went five miles futher, to Pigeon River, where I staid over Sunday with a blessed interest. I was sorry to have to leave.

This has been partly the scene of one of our late fires. Some of our brethren were more or less injured, but they don't sorrow, for they say all they want is to escape the dread fires of the burning day. May the Lord bless them. I returned on Monday eve. to cond place of meeting. The gathered in for miles around. e on the religion of Christ, entire consecration to the of the Lord in view of the coming of our Master. the dear friend who so kindly th such Christian spirit sent me TIMES for three months, I now my grateful thanks. I had een THE TIMES and admired its gs, but I thought I was too o take it. But as I read the g tidings, that are so full of Christian love, I feel I cannot ith it again. It speaks of the g of my beloved Savior, and to the signs that tell that tion is near. It tells of dear lgrims scattered over the West, pect soon to meet in the king f God. It speaks of the labors rdships of that old gray-headed , the Editor, who is still travel storms and through the wilder tell the sweet story of our ming King. And the letters avel-sketches of others in the vork make me love the paper the more so as I never hear t preaching here. Let us, dear n and sisters, do all we can to the glad tidings, by our money rs, and it will make us more here and our crown of rejoicing ine brighter in glory. As you me unto me, so I will do to and thus spread the good God bless you, one and all.

W Conolly, Jacksonville, Fla.

stened to your preaching in ter N. Y. I was constrained by the Spirit of the Lord in the movement in that city of 1867 to start for the kingdom. Shortly after I removed to this place where I have been trying to tell the people of the "good time coming." I feel I have gained strength in the cause of the Lord in trying to do what I could and have become well acquainted with the customs of the people in my four years' residence among them. I also know from observation that it is almost impossible that there should be a people who need the gospel of the kingdom more than do the poor class, who live in the Pine Woods of Florida and Georgia, I have come to the conclusion the Lord requires me to preach this gospel to them as a witness, and it may be the means of saving some. In order to do so I have to quit a good situation of four dollars per day, besides many comforts, but it is by the way of the cross we gain the crown.

These people I speak of as a general thing are not able to pay for the gospel and I have by the help of the Lord been trying to fix upon some plan that I might preach to them without being a burden. Traveling is the principal expense. Board is not so much; still going to new places it is hard to get that free until there is an interest awakened. In order to obviate these difficulties I have had a yacht made, sloop rigged, good sea model; fitted up to accomodate two or three persons, with board and lodging; and as most of the settlers live on or near the water courses a great number can by this means be reached with little expense, I think the supply of sweet potatoes and hominy will be abundant, and as palatable as "honey comb and wild locusts." And a suit of Kentucky Jeans can take the place of "camel's hair." I have an appointment six miles from Jacksonville two Sundays in a month; but I feel the time is so short I want to tell all I can of the news. I am in hopes to start with the yacht by the first of October. In this way I shall be able to carry tracts and books, that I could not upon horse back or on foot.

From W J Cummins, Forest Bay, Mich.

I am happy to hear that there are some places in this region where the recent scourge of fire did not pass through. As Br. Burr said in his late sermon, I see in this fire one of the forerunners of the coming judgment. Hence it becomes us to watch and be ready for the coming hour lest it take us at unawares. What is necessary for that event. First of all we need entire consecration to God. No half heartedness will do; for as God will not consent to suffer a rival kingdom, he ruling one and the enemy the other, so he will accept no half hearted service. He will have the whole heart or none. The spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead must dwell in us, because if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. Let us arise and sound the alarm as far as it is in our power, for the time is short. Then let us awake to righteousness. Then we shall be lights in the world, and others will see our good works and thus be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven. The fires have left us in a narrow place. Many have lost all, and our little band has been weakened, as some have been obliged to remove. But we are crying to God to raise up others to fill their places. Will you help us by your prayers, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified.

From W C Stone, Boston, Mass.

I enclose—handed me for the press of Buchanan, which I send hoping that what matter is "press"-ed out there, will be out-spoken on the question that brought us to take the position we did over thirty years ago. Never have I wavered a moment from the views then embraced, that at the end of the fourth kingdom, will come God's everlasting kingdom, I see no space between; when the fourth ends, then must come immediately the stone kingdom. As a snare will it come; suddenly. Many will be taken unawares.

Now what are the indications naturally apparent of its approach? I understand that "the eyes and mouth" were to speak and wear out the saints, until the Ancient of days shall come, and that the eleventh horn was to remain on the beast as long as the beast had life; and the judgment was to take away its dominion and authority, clear down at the close of the (fourth kingdom) life of the beast, and then comes the possession of the territory by the saints. Now how much authority have "the eyes and mouth," or the eleventh horn, at the present time? Why he cannot collect a penny of tax by any law of Rome at this present time, and as to domicile, why he is inquiring about, as to where he can go with safety, asking emperor William for some kind of protection, in case he should leave Rome.

Fow when I see the evening star setting in the West, and behold till the last twinkle is about gone, I must come to the conclusion that night is at hand; the day is fully gone. So when I see the condition of things in the political fourth kingdom I am forced to conclude the everlasting kingdom is but days or months away. How quickly do the days and seasons pass, and how soon must it be here. The world have had their warning. They know what the "Millerite" doctrine is. All have been taught to scoff from the pulpit to the press. If one begins to talk about the resurrection, why soon there is an inquiry to know if he is an Adventist. The subject has been talked in the store, in the shop, by the highway, in the vessel on the sea, and man will converse upon all topics, and especially on so momentous an event. At the late great fires in the West, people exclaimed that the fearful event might be upon them.

The people of this world have been as much warned as they were before the flood, and they now think as little of the need of a Savior as they did in those days of an ark to save them from the flood of waters. There is much cry of good works as a Savior, trusting to God's mercy and his unbounded love, and still walking in the broad road. O, mistaken souls! I hope the preaching brethren will stand up with God and in his strength declare plainly what he has bid them to do, in the short time remaining for work. Do it at the loss of all things. The time is short, the moments fly, golden moments! Hasten the people to tarry not in all the plain. God's angels are coming soon to reap the harvest. There will be more noise than was heard on the plains of Bethlehem, at the first advent. What a day, right upon us! O, ye suffering ones, who have stood the storms so long, a glorious company waits to escort you to the king.

"Oh! may thy kingdom come,
All power and dominion;
Bring now the faithful home

From C N Marcellus, Schenectady, N Y.

I arrived home last evening to hear that our dear and aged brother, Wm. B. Schermerhorn had gone to rest. I left him enjoying very fair health, but during my absence he was taken with a severe cold. It prostrated him very soon, and he finally closed his eyes, in the blessed hope that awaits him. Oh! if I can only finish this mortality as he has done! Pray for me, that I may be steadfast in the faith. I still read THE TIMES and find pleasure in it. Like a party that sent it back, and said he had a Bible and common sense, I trust I have too; but I know this much: THE TIMES taught me how to use them both, and it would him, also, if he knew anything of his Bible. I must close with a prayer for Heaven's blessings to rest upon you.

From A E Babcock.

I have just returned from my trip to Ohio, and I must say that take it all in all it was one of the most interesting times I have ever had. Not so much fruit as it has been my good fortune to gather sometimes, but much more seed sown than ever before in the same time. And I trust it is in soil that will bring forth in time of harvest an abundance.

I went from Millville in company with Br. D. Huls, about seven miles from Cambridge, Guernsey Co. and spent nearly a week. Spoke seven times, five times in the New School Baptist church, and twice in the Methodist house, because it was larger. The word took a deep hold, and I think made lasting impressions. On Sunday eve. I discussed the life and death question, first removing all their strongholds, and then presenting them God's truth; and I must say that I never saw an audience so completely carried away in my life. After I got through a young man studying to be a Methodist minister came forward and said he never had heard the like before, and he wanted to read on the subject. He procured one of Br. Whitmore's work and I think I could have sold many more. They took all I had of other books, and wanted more.

The Lord had helped me during the week to lead them on step by step in preparing the way for the last crowning truth; and then helped for two hours in presenting it. The fields in this part of the country are truly white for the harvest. On Monday eve. last I spoke in the village of Cambridge to a very intelligent audience, and they gave the best of attention while I tried to present some of the things written for their learning. There are some in Cambridge waiting for the blessed hope. Before coming down here I baptised one who had heard me two years ago at Millville.

From A. F. Dugger.

On my way to Ailanthus I stopped at Fairview. Met Eld. Enoch Williams, an efficient member of the Christian church of that place, who informed me that with several others had been notified to appear before the church on the following Saturday to answer to the charge of heresy, defined as a belief in Adventism. He is firm in the faith and is not ashamed nor afraid to speak out fully on the subject. Truth is spreading in this region, and it now has such a stronghold that it will continue to spread in spite of its enemies. They used to talk of "crushing Adventism in the bud" when first introduced in this section. But this talk has ceased, and the great cause is rapidly moving forward, and its advocates are encouraged. Let us stand united and work faithfully in pulling up the weeds which Satan has planted, and pray that the Lord of the harvest may send forth more laborers into this destitute field where men and women are perishing for the bread of life.

Commenced meetings with the Ailanthus church Sep. 23, and continued over the 30th. Four additions to the church. Our organization in this place is prosperous. Members are all new converts to the Advent faith except Br. Starkey and wife, who have been long in the way, and are in the full enjoyment of the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. May his day soon burst upon our dark world in all its glory and splendor, should ever be the ardent desire and fervent prayer of the true followers of Prince Immanuel. He has long been absent from his bride, but is now about to return to receive her unto himself. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations and he shall separate them with an eternal separation: those driven away into eternal death or eternal punishment; but the righteous will enter into life eternal; which is a fulfillment of the promise which he hath promised us "even eternal life." (1 John 2: 25.) "And this life is in his Son."

From E S Evans, Seymour, Iowa.

There are a few here in this part of Iowa waiting for the consummation of our hope of the speedy coming of our Savior. I never could believe the Bible until I heard the Adventists preach. Br. S. K. Gibson labors for us, preaching once in three weeks. He had a debate with a Methodist minister, J. M. Loughridge, on the immortality of the soul, and drove him from every position he took. Finally Loughridge said that the immortality of the soul was not directly taught in the Bible, but we could draw that inference from it, and when drove from that, said that Paul said "the soul must retain its idenity or there could be no resurrection." When asked for chapter and verse he said "it was in the 14th chapter of Texas!" We are gaining ground, slowly but surely. Pray for us, that the truth may pervail.

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation: but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canada) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre paid on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity. We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one-quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty-five, and one half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We propose to issue about the first of January a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent-Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 15c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Pledges.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to their names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000) whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H Hubbard, $1.00; S Pike, 1.00; D P Butts, 5.00; [illegible]

It does seem to us that this list of pledges does not grow as fast as it should. We are doing something toward extinguishing our debt, but not enough. Seven more "hundreds" would wipe it out. Many are doing nobly. Will not others respond soon?

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect by the committee. The other machines ranged from 5½ down to 21½. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught which saves horseflesh: it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for low rising and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

USUAL PRICE, $160.00;

but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be SOLD FOR ONE HUNDRED & TWENTY DOLLARS! If taken soon.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 12, 1871.

Preacher's Experience.

Having read with much interest those articles in THE TIMES relating to the ups and downs of a preacher's life, I would like to write some things that I have learned by experience which are profitable to me, and may be interesting to others.

In the first place, while there is considerable difference in the elements and influences that surround the preacher in different localities East or West, yet I find the same general characteristics are required in all localities to constitute a true minister of Christ. The outside deportment which is but the shuck may vary according to circumstances, but the spiritual desires and workings, which answer to the meat, must always be the same among all classes and in all circumstances.

A person, to be a true minister, must possess great powers of mental and moral endurance and resistance, while at the same time he must be both able and willing to bend to opposing elements ofttimes, that he may preserve his labor and his influence. Such a property in matter is called toughness. A preacher must be spiritually tough. And if he is not naturally tough enough to bend and not break, his contact with storms and tempests will be apt to break him. Some ministers are so brittle that they fly all in pieces at the least storm or wind of opposition. Such need toughening or tempering. God deals with no one so directly as with those whom he chooses as his ministers. Remember this. He requires them to go through a peculiar spiritual discipline, such as no one in any other vocation can either understand or experience, and if they can or will not bend, then they must break. They are set apart especially for his use, and they must take what he sends them, and if they take it patiently, well: if not, they must suffer more than necessary because they resist. Let every new minister remember that he must cultivate spiritual toughness. When he meets strong opposition to the truth or right, he must keep down the spirit of contention in his heart, and "in meekness instruct those that oppose themselves." With the ignorant and willful he must be kind and patient, and if the truth seems to suffer, and the enemy to triumph for a little, yet the preacher must wait upon God, and not break into contention and abuse but bend to the storm, and then when God sends victory, and peace, and sunshine, which he surely will, no ruins will need to be repaired.

Another thing. Father Kingsley once said in an Ill. Conference, "remember, preachers are but crockery. Don't put them on a high shelf lest they fall off and are cracked or broken. Then they will never be so good again. Don't put them under foot to be kicked around among kettles and pails, and get bruised and scratched. Put them right where they can be got at handy and be used and useful." I do not know as I can add anything to that only to say amen!

Another thing he said was this: "Some new preachers need encouraging, and some need knocking on the head." Some may think they get knocks when they do not need them, but let me say that I find in my experience that neither encouragements or knocks ever hurt a true minister. But what is it to encourage a preacher Is it to flatter or praise him? By no means. To encourage is to nourish and strengthen, and no one gets substantial nourishment and strength by eating sweetmeats and candy. Flattery and open praise are like these, the latter being the sugar and former the poisoned color. What strengthens a preacher is good sound advice and counsel. This is solid food. Give it to him at proper seasons. And let the preacher make a distinction betw[illegible]l and praise, and seek the former in preference to the latter every time. When I went out as a pilgrim from my native State to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, weak and inexperienced as I was, I found those who were every ready to strengthen me, but they were wise enough not to stuff me with flattery. They told me my faults, they criticised my sermons, but in all my blunders and mistakes they stood by me, and I never felt alone. They gave me advice and counsel, and while I labored in Western N. Y. I knew I had friends whose word of reproof was of more value to me than any honey words of flattery that others might give.

Young preacher, fear not sound advice but fear flattery.

Knocks do not hurt a true hearted preacher. Side blows, and back thrusts from pretended friends are hurtful, but solid blows from the front can do no harm. If preachers are heady, or self-willed, they need bringing to their senses if they have any. And if they persist in their own way, it is full proof that God never sent them. If a preacher gets his head full of the pronoun "I," there should always be a place kept open by knocks if need be that self may make room for Jesus.

If any would learn more of preachers experience, they can easily do so by entering into the work themselves.

F. BURR.

FROM the Methodist Protestant: "Let us remember that every city in our land, yea, that the whole earth, is 'reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.' Some men may laugh, at this prediction. So they might have laughed, a month ago, at a prediction respecting the burned city. But whether they laugh or pray, 'the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up.'"

The Kingdom of Christ.

The reign of the Messiah will be introduced after his advent. The parable of the nobleman is insignificant with any other interpretation. All evangelical interpreters agree that the nobleman is Christ, and the departure into a far country is his ascension into heaven; the mission is to receive for himself a kingdom, and the return is the coming back of Christ to the earth. No mention is made of a millennium during this period of absence, but the whole time is spent in occupying the pounds, by the servants, and in rebellion against authority, by his enemies. Do we not yet hear the cry, from every part of the world, "We will not have this man to reign over us?" This parable is in process of fulfillment now, and will only be completed when Christ shall return from heaven to administer the kingdom which he has received from his Father. If the return of Christ is not to be literal, the departure was not literal. The ascension of Christ took place while he still remained on the earth.

In connection with this, the parable of the tares and the wheat precludes the possibility of a millennium previous to the coming of Christ. The righteous and the wicked are to remain in the same field until the harvest, which is the end of the world, or (tou aionos) of this dispensation. The loftiest flight of imagination, as well as the most consummate sophistry in reasoning, must fail to find in these parables the realization of the glorious kingdom of our blessed Lord, except in recognizing the pre-millennial and personal advent of Christ. forth the doctrine of the final judgment in the destruction of the enemies, and the burning of the tares, gratuitous assumption is manifest. Nothing is said about the wicked being brought out of their graves to be judged.

In Daniel, we find predictions which plainly set forth the coming of the kingdom of God immediately after the destruction of other wicked governments. The image of Nebuchadnezzar contains all the forms of government which are to exist until the destruction of the nations by the power of God. Language cannot reveal any truth more clearly than that five kingdoms, exercising almost supreme control over the earth, are to arise in succession, and that they are to be succeeded by a kingdom which the Most High shall set up, which is to be eternal in duration. The kingdom of Babylon—the hammer of the whole earth—was succeeded by the Medo-Persian. The Medo-Persian by the Grecian. The Grecian by the Roman. Rome Pagan gave place to Rome Papal. The latter is the city which exercises control over the kings of tha earth. No controversy is held about the existence of these kingdoms, and it is strange that men will accept, as literal, the language spoken of, the first four, or more properly, five, and confuse the mind by denying a literal interpretation to the language spoken of the sixth. "In the days of these kings (the ten represented by the ten toes of the image) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed." The stone cut out of the mountain without hands was to smite the image on the feet and break them to pieces, and destroy the whole image.

In all these predictions of Daniel, which, under different symbols, occupy a large portion of his prophecy, we find that no time elapses between the destruction of earthly kingdoms and the setting up of the kingdom of God, which is to endure forever. From these passages, and from many others which might be quoted, the following facts appear:

1. That the present condition of affairs will continue until the coming of Christ.
2. That the kingdoms of the world are not to be absorbed, but destroyed.
3. They are to be overthrown by the Lord, at his coming.
4. That the kingdom of God is to be set up on the earth.

It will be necessary to inquire more particularly by what means the world is to be subjected to Christ. It is not to be done by the preaching of the gospel. In the Apostolic Commission the opposite of this is indirectly taught, for a part only were to believe, and a part remain in unbelief. "Many are called, but few chosen." The Church is to continue a little flock, as sheep in the midst of wolves, but never to exercise control until the ushering in of the kingdom of our Lord. The elect of God are the chosen ones who are gathered out of the world, even out from among the nations: but they do not constitute nations; When the disciples asked Christ the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" he said, among many other things, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Matt. 24: 14. There is not the most remote hint of the conversion of the nations by the gospel, but simply that the publication of it to the whole earth is one of the signs preceding the coming of Christ. Dr. Jacobus, in his comments on Mark 13: 10, says:

The gospel has yet to be preached universally for a testimony. And the universal diffusion of it by modern Christian missions is now a leading sign of the end.

How joyous the strains of many gospel ministers, while setting forth the glorious work of preaching the gospel and bringing in necessary connection with it the reign of the Messiah on the earth. The mistake is in connecting them together by a link which the Scripture does not furnish. God has raised up a ministry to preach the gospel for the saving of souls and the building up of the Church, but does not promise that the nations will be converted by this instrumentality.

Look at facts and judge whether the Church, with all its corruption, is the destined instrument of subjugating the nations, or whether the Lord himself will do the work. Nearly six thousand years have passed and the Church has been a little flock. Even now the ratio of nominal professors is little greater than the first century of the Christain era. Yet it should be many hundred times greater. If the Church had gathered in the majority of the race now living still we have no evidence that it will not be reduced to small limits, as it has been many times in the history of the world. Many nations have risen, flourished and fallen, but no nation has ever been absorbed by the Church. The indications are that the kingdoms now in existence will still continue to be the kingdoms of this world, until [illegible] whose right they are [illegible] possess them.

Analogy proves that this dispensation will end in destruction. God's plan of providence does not change. The patriarchal dispensation was terminated by the flood, by which the whole world was destroyed except the family of Noah. The Mosaic dispensation with the only true government that has ever existed on the earth; having only the laws of heaven for guidance and God for their king, was terminated with most terrible judgments, which cut off the great mass of the people and left a few of God's elect to mourn over the ruins.

Now we see the significance of the language of Christ in answer to the disciples, when they asked what shall be "the sign of thy coming" and of the end of this world or dispensation, He said, "as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "Likewise as it was in the days of Lot, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." If this dispensation shall not end in disaster then God's plan will be changed and this language is insignificant. Then, as formerly, a "remnant shall be saved," and the great mass shall perish. The post-Millennial Adventists claim these passages as referring to the judgment, but they fail to show any intervening period for the reign of Christ. If this present dispensation is to terminate like the two preceding ones, a millennium previous to his coming is absolutely impossible.—Rev. H. A. Barclay, in Interior.

Come!

God grant we may not be in darkness that that day should overtake us as a thief! Rather, as we now listen to the latest voice of the great 'Testifier,' the last toll of the advent-bell, the last 'Memory of Patmos,' let it sound to us like strains of seraphic music floating on a midnight sea. Let it ring in our ears blended comfort and warning; tempering prosperity, mitigating adversity, moderating the world's ambition, subordinating to holiness, preparing for Paradise. Whatever may be the antecedent or intervening events to which we have alluded, let the second coming itself tower above them all, in the glorious distance, like some colossal Alp, with plain and valley and lowlier mountain between, but rising peerless in the blue horizon, its gleaming top golden with heavenly sunlight, and from its eternal snows and hidden fountains sending forth ten thousand streams of hope and joy, to refresh the dwellers in the valley of tears. Bright and morning star! Harbinger of eternal day! who will not bid thee welcome? who will not help, in the noblest sense, to—

"Ring in the Christ that is to be!"

"The Spirit says, COME!" The divine agent, whose own "coming," as the Paraclete or Comforter, was declared by the departing Savior to more than indemnify the Church for her Redeemer's absence, hails the advent which is to crown and consummate his own work as the glorifier of Christ. "The Bride says, COME!" the ransomed church on earth, longing for the bridal day of perfected bliss,—the ransomed church in heaven, saints, martyrs, departed friends who have fallen asleep in Jesus—take up the antiphonal strain, and cry, COME! A groaning creation, weary of the bondage of sin and sorrow, and longing to go forth from its leper-couch walking and leaping and praising God, cries, COME! Can we take up one of the multiplying echoes, and, blending our prayer with the sons of God, give willing response to the apostle's closing invocation, "and let him that heareth say COME?" In lowly rejoicing confidence, can we include ourselves in the sublime words of another faithful 'Watcher' for this glorious Day-spring:—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord!" "AMEN! EVEN so, COME, LORD JESUS!"—Memories of Patmos.

A WRITER in Guthrie's Sunday Magazine for October says: "God has closed the canon of Scripture, we can expect no other revelation save the one, 'Surely I come quickly:' and with the premonitory signs thereof, earth seems now to shake and the heavens to tremble."

Preacher's Experience.

Having read with much interest those articles in THE TIMES relating to the ups and downs of a preacher's life, I would like to write some things that I have learned by experience which are profitable to me, and may be interesting to others.

In the first place, while there is considerable difference in the elements and influences that surround the preacher in different localities East or West, yet I find the same general characteristics are required in all localities to constitute a true minister of Christ. The outside deportment which is but the shuck may vary according to circumstances, but the spiritual desires and workings, which answer to the meat, must always be the same among all classes and in all circumstances.

A person, to be a true minister, must possess great powers of mental and moral endurance and resistance, while at the same time he must be both able and willing to bend to opposing elements ofttimes, that he may preserve his labor and his influence. Such a property in matter is called toughness. A preacher must be spiritually tough. And if he is not naturally tough enough to bend and not break, his contact with storms and tempests will be apt to break him. Some ministers are so brittle that they fly all in pieces at the least storm or wind of opposition. Such need toughening or tempering. God deals with no one so directly as with those whom he chooses as his ministers. Remember this. He requires them to go through a peculiar spiritual discipline, such as no one in any other vocation can either understand or experience, and if they can or will not bend, then they must break. They are set apart especially for his use, and they must take what he sends them, and if they take it patiently, well: if not, they must suffer more than necessary because they resist. Let every new minister remember that he must cultivate spiritual toughness. When he meets strong opposition to the truth or right, he must keep down the spirit of contention in his heart, and "in meekness instruct those that oppose themselves." With the ignorant and willful he must be kind and patient, and if the truth seems to suffer, and the enemy to triumph for a little, yet the preacher must wait upon God, and not break into contention and abuse but bend to the storm, and then when God sends victory, and peace, and sunshine, which he surely will, no ruins will need to be repaired.

Another thing. Father Kingsley once said in an Ill. Conference, "remember, preachers are but crockery. Don't put them on a high shelf lest they fall off and are cracked or broken. Then they will never be so good again. Don't put them under foot to be kicked around among kettles and pails, and get bruised and scratched. Put them right where they can be got at handy and be used and useful." I do not know as I can add anything to that only to say amen!

Another thing he said was this: "Some new preachers need encouraging, and some need knocking on the head." Some may think they get knocks when they do not need them, but let me say that I find in my experience that neither encouragements or knocks ever hurt a true minister. But what is it to encourage a preacher Is it to flatter or praise him? By no means. To encourage is to nourish and strengthen, and no one gets substantial nourishment and strength by eating sweetmeats and candy. Flattery and open praise are like these, the latter being the sugar and former the poisoned color. What strengthens a preacher is good sound advice and counsel. This is solid food. Give it to him at proper seasons. And let the preacher make a distinction betw[illegible] and praise, and seek the former in preference to the latter every time. When I went out as a pilgrim from my native State to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, weak and inexperienced as I was, I found those who were every ready to strengthen me, but they were wise enough not to stuff me with flattery. They told me my faults, they criticised my sermons, but in all my blunders and mistakes they stood by me, and I never felt alone. They gave me advice and counsel, and while I labored in Western N. Y. I knew I had friends whose word of reproof was of more value to me than any honey words of flattery that others might give.

Young preacher, fear not sound advice but fear flattery.

Knocks do not hurt a true hearted preacher. Side blows, and back thrusts from pretended friends are hurtful, but solid blows from the front can do no harm. If preachers are heady, or self-willed, they need bringing to their senses if they have any. And if they persist in their own way, it is full proof that God never sent them. Psalm. 16.

Lord, keep me ; for I trust in thee :
  To God thus was my speech,
Thou art my Lord, and unto thee
  My goodness doth not reach :

To saints on earth, to th' excellent,
  Where my delight's all placed,
Their sorrows shall be multiplied
  To other gods that haste.

Of their drink offerings of blood
  I will no offering make ;
Yea, neither their very names
  Up in my lips will take.

God is of mine inheritance
  And cup the portion :
The lot that falles is to me
  Thou dost maintain alone.

Unto me happily the lines
  In pleasant places fell ;
Yea, the inheritance I got
  In beauty doth excel.

I bless the Lord, because he both
  By counsel me conduct ;
And, in the seasons of the night,
  My reins do me instruct.

Before me still the Lord I set :
  Sith it is so, that he
Doth ever stand at my right hand,
  I shall not moved be.

Because of this my heart is glad,
  And joy shall be exprest
E'en by my glory ; and my flesh
  In confidence shall rest.

Because my soul in grave to dwell
  Shalt not be left by thee ;
Nor wilt thou give thine Holy One
  Corruption to see.

Thou wilt me shew the path of life :
  Of joys there is full store
  Are pleasures evermore.

Our Pulpit.

What Time is It?

BY THE REV. J. C. RYLE, B. A., ENGLAND.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." (Rom. 13: 12.)

These words ought to come home to our consciences like the blast of a trumpet. They ought to rouse our sleeping minds to a sense of the eternal realities which are before us. They call upon us to lay aside all trifling, lingering, and carelessness about our Christianity. They summon us to a close walk with God.

I. You have here the present condition of the world,—It is night.

II. You have the condition of the world which is yet to come,—It will be day.

III. You have the particular time in which our lot is cast,—The night is far spent, and the day is at hand.

IV. You have the duty of all believers who know the time,—They ought to cast off the works of darkness, and to put on the armor of light.

Upon each of these four points I have something to say.

1. First of all let us consider

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE WORLD.

The Apostle Paul calls it "night." "The night," he says, "is far spent."

I have no doubt that word seems strange to some persons. They think it wonderful that the year 1871 should be called "night." They are living in days of learning, science, civilization, commerce, freedom and knowledge. They see around them things which their forefathers never dreamed of,—railways, manufactories, gas, electricity, steam engines, education for all, and cheap books. I know it all, and am thankful for it. Nevertheless I say that in the things of God the world is still in a state of "night." I believe that God looks down on this globe of ours as it rolls round the sun, and as he looks upon it, he pronounces it "very dark." I believe that the angels go to and fro, and make report of all they see on our earth, and their constant report is, "very dark." And I am sure that believers in the Lord Jesus in every land are of one mind on the subject. They cry and sigh for the abominations they see around them. To them the world appears "very dark."

Is it not dark

IN HEATHEN LANDS?

There are two-thirds of the whole world in open rebellion against God and his Christ. Two out of every three inhabitants of the globe have no Bible, no gospel, no knowledge, no faith, no hope. They are cruel, deceitful, immoral, unclean, earthly, sensual, devilish, idolatrous, superstitious. Surely that is night.

Is it not dark in many professedly Christian countries? There are two-thirds of all the professing Christians on earth who are unsound in the faith. Their religion is not simply Scriptural. They have added to it many things which are not found in the Bible. They have left out of it many things which the Bible has plainly commanded. There are millions who give honor to the Virgin Mary and dead saints instead of Christ. There are millions of baptized people who know nothing of the Bible, and have not the slightest idea of the salvation contained in the gospel. Surely that is night.

It is not dark in

at this present day? How much of sin there is in Protestant Britian and America, and how little of God! How much of open infidelity, heathenish ignorance, drunkeness, irreligion, swearing, cheating, lying, covetousness is weekly crying against us before the Lord of Hosts! How many people go to no place of worship at all! How many go to church merely as a matter of form! How few are really in earnest about the salvation of their souls! How few have any evidence to show of a saving faith in Christ, and a real work of the Spirit in their hearts! Surely even among ourselves it is night.

Is there not much darkness under the eyes of every true believer? Go to the most godly, quiet, and orderly parish in our land at this moment. Ask any well-informed child of God residing in it, how many true Christians it contains, and what is the proportion of the converted to the unconverted. Mark well the answer he will give. I doubt if you will find a parish where one third of the people are converted. And if such be the report of parishes which are like the green tree, what must be the state of things in the dry? Surely it is night.

Reader, it is useless to deny these things. Humbling as it may be to the pride of human nature, the word of the Apostle is strictly true,—

THE TIME PRESENT IS NIGHT

An unconverted man may not perceive it. A graceless man may not comprehend it. The blind eye sees no difference between noon and midnight. The deaf ear makes no distinction between discord and sweet music. The mortified limb has no feeling either of heat or cold. But I do believe that God's children can enter into the meaning of the expression. The people of the Lord Jesus Christ find by experience that it is night.

It is a cold time time to believers. They meet with much chill to dampen their zeal, and little to cheer warm hearts. They have to put up with many crosses and disappointments. They see iniquity abounding, and their own love is apt to become cold. And why? It is night.

It is a lonely time to believers. They find little company on the way that leads to heaven. Here and there they fall in with one who loves the Lord Jesus, and lives by faith. A few of God's children may be found in one town and a few in another. But on the whole the children of the world seem like the Syrian army, which filled the country, and the children of God are like a few scattered sheep in a wilderness. And why? It is night.

It is a dangerous time to believers. They often stumble, and scarcely discern their path. They often and know not which way to turn. They sometimes see not their tokens, and lose sight of their landmarks. At best they travel on in continual fear of enemies. And why? It is night.

Reader, I ask you to ponder these things. If time present be night, you will not wonder if we ministers warn Christians to watch and pray. You will count it no strange thing if we tell you to live like soldiers in an enemy's country, and to be always on your guard.

Reader, sit down and ask yourself whether you find this world in which you live to be night or day. Is time present a time of conflict or a time of ease? Do you feel that your best things are here in this life, or that your best things are yet to come? I offer these questions to you as a test of your spiritual state. I place them before you as a guage and measure of your soul's condition. I tell you plainly, if you never found this world a wilderness and place of darkness, it is an evil sign of your state in the sight of God. The true believer will find the words of his crucified Lord to be strictly true, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." (Jno. 16: 33.) The like his Lord and Master, will be made "perfect through sufferings." The true believer will mourn over the world he lives in, as a world in rebellion against its rightful King. Sin will grieve him. Ungodliness will make him heavy of heart. Like Lot in Sodom, his righteous soul will be daily vexed with much that he sees and hears. He will long for the time when the day shall dawn, and the shadows flee away. For the present he will feel it is night.

II. Let us consider, in the second place, the condition of the world which is yet to come. The Apostle Paul calls it "day."

The world we live in is not to go on always as it does now. The darkness of sin, ignorance, and superstition is not always to cover the earth. The sun of righteousness shall one day rise with healing in his wings. The Lord Jesus shall come again with power and great glory, [illegible] shall return as a morning without clouds, and then it shall be day."

There is a time coming when the devil shall be bound, and shall no longer rule in this world. (Rev. 20: 1, &c.) Sin and all its consequences shall be cast out. The groaning creation shall at length be refreshed. (Acts 3: 19.) The wicked shall be shut up forever in their own place. The saints of the Most High shall at length possess the kingdom. There shall be a new heaven and a new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness. Surely that will be "day."

There is a

when believers shall have joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Every tear shall be wiped, every cross laid down, every anxiety removed, every bitter cup taken away. Persecution, temptation, sickness, mourning, parting, separation, and death, shall be at an end. Surely that will be sunshine. It will be "day."

There is a time coming when the whole family of Christ shall be gathered together. They shall rise from their narrow beds, and each put on a glorious body. They shall awake from their long sleep refreshed, strengthened and far more beautiful than when they lay down. They shall leave behind them in their graves every imperfection, and meet without spot or wrinkle, to part no more. Surely that will be a joyful morning. It will be "day."

There is a time coming when believers shall no longer see through a glass darkly, but face to face. They shall see as they have been seen, and know as they have been known. They shall cease to wrangle and dispute about outward matters, and shall think of nothing but eternal realities. They shall behold their crucified Lord and Savior with the eye of sense, and no longer follow him by faith. They shall see one another free from all corruption, and misunderstand one another's motives and conduct no more. Surely that will be "day."

for every believer in Christ who reads these pages. There is a day before you, a glorious day. You sometimes feel now as if you walked in darkness and had no light. You have often a hard battle to fight with the world, the flesh, and the devil. You sometimes fancy you will never win your way home, and must faint by the way. Your flesh and heart are ready to fail. You are sorely tempted to give up, and to sit down in despair. But take comfort in the things yet to come. There is a good time before you. Your day is yet to dawn.

I see here great reason why many professing Christians should tremble and be afraid. There are many, too many I fear, to whom the time to come will be anything but day. There are many whose happiness is evidently all below whose treasure is all on earth, whose brightest time is now, and whose gloomier prospects are hereafter. The further they look on, the darker everything appears. Old age looks dark,—sickness looks darker still,—death and judgment look darkest of all!

Beloved reader, if this be your case, I warn you plainly there

MUST BE A CHANGE.

Your views, your tastes, your inclinations, your affections must be renewed and transformed. You must learn to view the world that now is, and that is to come, in a very different light. Go and sit at the feet of Jesus, and ask him to teach you this lesson. Ask for the enlightening Spirit to annoint your eyes that you may see. Ask for the veil to be taken away, that you may behold everthing in its true colors.

I know well that Satan labors hard to prevent men thinking of a better world than that in which we live. He strives to turn away their eyes from the coming day. He would fain persuade them that it is impossible to do their duty in this life, and at the same time to set their affections on things above. He whispers to people that we ministers want them to become gloomy hermits, or fanatical misanthropes, and that if they listen to us they will become unfitted for all the relations of life. Against all suggestions of Satan, I warn

EVERY READER TO BE ON HIS GUARD.

I bid no one neglect the duties of his station, or forsake the post which God has called him to fill. I encourage no one in moroseness and churlishness, as if there was nothing to be thankful for in this world. I praise no one who refuses his affections to those with whom he is united by love, friendship, and relationship. I only ask that the believer in the New Testament should live by a New Testament standard,—that he should look for the coming of the day of God, and wait for the Son of God from Heaven, and love his Lord's appearing.

Reader, I abhor all extravagance and fanaticism on the subject of things to come. I have no opinion of any religion which makes a man neglect his business, or cease to love wife, children, relatives and friends. I only ask that we should take Scriptural views of things as they yet will be. I ask that we should see our present evils and mourn over them,—that we should see our future good things and long for them. Let us honestly confess that sin is around us, long to be delivered from its presence. Let us honestly confess that holiness is one day to spread over the earth, and long for it to come. Let us never be ashamed to allow that it is "night," and that we want it to be "day."

Tell me, can that man really hate sin, who does not desire to see it

SWEPT AWAY FROM THE EARTH?

Can that man love holiness who does not long for the time when all shall know the Lord? Can that man be truly united to Christ by faith who does not wish to see Christ, and to be with him? Can that man be a saint who does not thirst after the unmixed company of just men made perfect? Can that man be in earnest who daily prays, "Thy kingdom come," and yet is content that the world should go on as it is without any change? Oh! no! no! These things are impossible. God's true children will want to be at home. They will wish for the day.

Reader, if you wish to be saved, you must learn to view time present as "night," and time to come as "day." You must learn to regard the other side of Jordan as the home of your soul, and this side as a desert land. Time present must be your wilderness, your battle-field, your place of trial,—time to come must be your Canaan, your rest, your Father's house,—or else you had better never been have born.

III. In the third place, let us consider the particular time in which our lot is cast.

The Apostle Paul tells us, when he says, "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand." I believe these words mean that the last order of things has arrived,—the last stage in the history of the church has come. The law and the prophets have done their work. The Messiah promised at the fall has appeared, and provided a COMPLETE SALVATION.

The revelation of God's will has been made. The way of life has been laid open to all mankind. No further message from heaven to earth is to be expected before the end. No more books of Scripture are to be written. We have reached the last watch of the night. We have nothing to expect now but the sunrise and the morning.

Reader, these words, which were true eighteen hundred years ago, are, if possible, more true at the present time. They are words which should come home with increasing power to the church of Christ every year,—"The night is far spent: the day is at hand."

I am one of those who think "the day" may not be so far off as some seem to suppose. I am unable to put away the idea of the Lord's return in glory as an event which "of course" cannot be in our times, as some men say. I rather think I see tokens of the sun being near the horizon. At all events I desire to keep in special remembrance Jame's words, "The Judge standeth before the door,—the coming of the Lord draweth nigh," and Peter's words, "The end of all things is at hand." (Jas. 5: 8, 9; 1 Pet. 4: 7.)

I am no prophet, and may easily be mistaken. I may die, and you may die, before Christ comes, and the day dawns. But I appeal to whether there are not "signs of the times" which deserve serious attention. I ask him to notice the things going on in the world and to consider well what they are intended to teach.

Does any reader ask what I mean by "signs of the times?" Let him weigh well the six following points, and he will see what I mean:

1. What shall we say to the missions to the heathen which have been set on foot in these latter days? Seventy years ago the Protestant churches seemed thoroughly asleep on the subject of missions. There was hardly a missionary sent forth to the heathen from the whole of Great Britian. The idea of preaching the gospel to savages and idolaters, was ridiculed. The first promoters of missions were treated coldly by many who ought to have known better. But now the feeling is completely changed. We are employing hundreds of missionaries in every quarter of the globe. And what saith the Scripture, "The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and then shall the end come." (Mat. 24: 14.)

2. What shall we say to the surprising interest taken in the Jewish nation in these latter days? Seventy years ago to be a Jew was a taunt and a by-word and a proverb. No man cared for the souls of the children of Abraham. They were people despised, and scorned, and trampled under foot. It might truly have been said, "This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after." (Jer. 30: 17.) But now the feeling is COMPLETELY CHANGED.

The spiritual interests of the Jews are a subject of deep concern to true Christians. The civil rights of Jews are cared for even to an extreme. The very city of Jerusalem has weight in the councils of kings. Yet what saith the Scripture? "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea the set time is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." (Ps. 102: 13-16.)

3. What shall we say to the wonderful spread of knowledge and communication between nations in these days? Seventy years ago to find a poor man who could read, was rather an uncommon thing. In a few years a man who cannot read will be a rare sight. Seventy years ago there were few who ever travelled beyond the bounds of their own county. Now every one can move in every direction, and our population is like a swarm of bees disturbed. Steam navigation and railways have

ALTERED THE CHARACTER OF SOCIETY.

Time and space are made nothing of. Seas, mountains, and rivers are no longer obstacles. God separated the nations in the day of Babel. Man is working hard to make them one again. And what saith the Scripture? "Shut up the words and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." (Dan. 12: 4.)

4. What shall we say to the wars and shaking of nations which we have seen in these last seventy years? The mightiest empires on earth have been shaken to their very foundations. Kings, and princes, and great men, have been driven from their high position by scores, and been made wanderers on the face of the earth. There has been no accounting for it by any human reasoning. These movements have taken place in the face of increased knowledge, civilization, and desire of peace. The shock came from beneath. And what saith the Scripture? "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows." (Mat. 24: 7, 8.)

5. What shall we say to the increased attention to unfulfilled prophecy, which has appeared in these latter days? Seventy years ago there were few who paid any attention to the subject. The passages in Scripture which speak of things to come were comparatively neglected, or perverted with curious ingenuity from their simple meaning. Now, on the contrary, the current of public feeling runs strongly in favor of prophetical study. Books on the subject are eagerly bought up. Lectures on the subject are listened to with increased attention. And what saith the Scripture? "The words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." (Dan. 12: 9.) The words seem unfolding. The seal seems breaking.

CAN THE END BE FAR OFF?

I see in these words the strongest motives for diligence in the work of doing good to souls. Let us make more haste to spread the gospel over the world. Let us take more pains in endeavoring to sow truth at home. Let us labor, if possible, to pluck more brands from the burning. The time is short. The night is far spent. The day is at hand.

I see in these words the strongest consolation for the believer in Christ Jesus. Oh! for the heart to lay hold on it more and more!

Yet a little while, and believers shall part forever with disease. The sick and wearied ones, who have mourned over their seeming uselessness to the church,—the weak and infirm, who have had the will to work, but not the power,—the feeble and bed-ridden, who have waited long-drawn years in quiet chambers, till their eyes know every crack and speck on their walls,—all, all shall be set free. They shall each have a glorious body like their Lord's.

Yet a little while and mourning believers shall part forever with their tears. Every wound in their hearts shall be completely healed. Every empty place and gap in their affections shall be entirely filled up. They shall find that those who have died in the Lord were not lost, but gone before. They shall see that infinite wisdom arranged every bereavement, by which one was taken and another left. They shall magnify the Lord together with those who were once their companions in tribulation, and acknowledge that he did all things well, and led them by a right way.

Yet a little while and believers shall no more feel they are alone. They shall no longer lament that they see so as a man speaketh with his friends,—so few who are of one mind, and travel with them in the one narrow way. They shall be united to the general assembly and church of the first born. They shall join the blessed company of all the believers of every name, and tongue. Their eyes shall at length be satisfied with seeing. They shall see a multitude of saints that none can number, and not one wicked person among them.

Yet a little while, and working believers shall find that their labor was not in vain. The ministers who have preached and seemed to reap no fruit,—the missionaries who testified of the gospel, and none seemed to believe,—the teachers who poured into children's minds line upon line, and none seemed to attend,—all, all shall discover that they have not spent their strength for nought. They shall find that the seed sown can spring up after many days, and that sooner or later in all labor there is profit.

IV. And now, in the last place, let me speak of the particular duty of all believers connected with the truths we have just considered. That practical duty is put before us in plain words, "Let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

Reader, I love to observe how closely the doctrine of Christ's second coming and kingdom is bound up with PERSONAL HOLINESS.

I marvel that any can regard the second advent and reign of the Lord Jesus as merely speculative matters, or denounce them as unprofitable subjects. To my own mind they seem eminently practical, or else I have read my Bible to very little purpose.

Does not the Apostle Paul say to the Phillippians, "Let your moderation be known unto all men: the Lord is at hand." (Phil. 4: 5.) Does he not say to the Collossians, "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth." (Col. 3: 2-5.) Does not he bid the Hebrews to "Exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10: 25.) Does not Peter say, "We look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." (2 Pet. 3: 13, 14.) These texts appear to me to speak with no uncertain voice. I know not how their force can be evaded. They make the coming of Christ, and the day of glory, an argument for increased holiness. And it is just in the same way that Paul says, "Let cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

Reader, how are you to "cast off the works of darkness?" Listen to me and I will tell you. You ought to lay aside everything in your life and habits which of Christ's appearing. You ought to make it a principal of conscience to do nothing you would not like to be found doing when Jesus comes again to gather his people together. This is a searching test, indeed. The application of it must be left to every man's own heart. Each must judge for himself. Each must prove his own works. Each must set up an assize within him, and honestly bring his ways to a trial. Oh! for a will to deal fairly and justly with in ourselves! Oh! for a daily readiness to judge ourselves that we be not judged of the Lord, and to condemn ourselves that we be not condemned at the last day!

Try all your employment of time by the test of Christ's second coming. Place in this balance your amusements, your books, your companions, your manner of conversation, your daily behavior in all the relations of life. Measure all by this measure—"The night is far spent and the day is at hand. Am I living as a child of the night, or as one who looks for the day?" Do this, and you will cast off the works of darkness.

But how are you to put on the armor of light? Listen to me once more, and I will tell you. You ought to which becomes a believer in Christ, and a child of God, and a citizen of a heavenly kingdom. You ought not to leave eminent holiness and spirituality to a few, as if none but a few favored ones could be eminent saints. You ought to labor to wear the armor of light yourself, the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the helmet of hope and the sword of the Spirit. (Eph. 6: 15-17.) Wherever you may live, and whatever may be your trials—however great your difficulties, and however small your helps—nothing should prevent your aiming at the highest standard, to behave like one who believes that Christ is coming again.

You should resolve, by God's help, so to live, that the day of Christ shall find you needing as little change as possible. You should seek to have tastes so heavenly—affections so spiritual,—a will so subdued—a mind so unworldly, that when the Lord appears you may be thoroughly in tune for his kingdom. Verily it was a fine saying of Dr. Preston, on his death bed, "I go to change my place but not my company."

Ah! reader, I fear that some believers will be far less ready for the day of Christ than others. I suspect that some will have a more abundant entrance into paradise than their brethren—more boldness, more confidence, more felt readiness for the company of their Lord. Oh! that every one into whose hands this address may fall, may so that like Enoch he may be translated from a lower degree of communion to a higher—from walking by faith, to walking by sight. This would be putting on the armor of light.

Let there be light in your heart continually; Christ dwelling there by faith,—felt, known, and experienced by your soul. Let there be light in your life continually: Christ reflected there, followed, imitated, and copied. Seek to be a light in the world and nothing less—a bright light, a clear light, a light that men can see afar off. Do this and you will put on the armor of light.

Live as if you thought Christ might come at any time. Do everything as if you did it for the last time. Say everything as if you said it for the last [illegible]. Read every chapter in the Bible as if you did not know whether you would be allowed to read it again. Pray every prayer as if you felt it might be your last opportunity. Hear every sermon as if you were hearing once and forever. This is the way to be found ready. This is the way to turn Christ's second appearing to good account. This the way to put on the armor of light.

And now perhaps this address has fallen into the hands of some careless, thoughtless, unconverted person. Reader, are you that man? Then, remember these words, "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand."

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

You eat, you drink, you sleep, you dress, you work, you buy, you sell, you laugh, you read, but you DO nothing for your soul. Hell is opening its mouth for you, and you are careless. Christ is coming to judge the world, and you are unprepared. Time hurries on, and you are not ready for eternity.

Oh! awake to a sense of your danger, and repent this day. Awake and call upon your God, before it is too late to pray. Awake and seek the Lord Jesus Christ, before the door is shut, and the day of wrath begins. Alas! you may be thought wise and clever in this world, but living as you do you act the part of a madman.

But perhaps this address has fallen into the hands of one who is

UNDECIDING AND HALTING BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

Reader are you that man? Then remember these words. "The night is far spent and the day is at hand."

What are you doing? You hear, you listen, you wish, you desire, you mean, you intend, you hope, you resolve, but you go no further. You see the ark, but you will not go in. You see the bread of life, but you do not eat it. You wait. And yet time gets on. The devil is saying over you, "I shall have this soul before long." Oh! come out from the world, and linger no more. Take up the cross. Cast away vain excuses. Confess Christ before men. Beware, I say, lest you make up your mind too late. Again I say beware.

But perhaps this address has fallen into the hands of some true believer. Reader are you that man! Then remember these words, "The night is far spent, and the day is at hand."

I ask you to live as if you believed the words we have been considering, and to show the world you think them true. The nearer you draw to home, the you ought to be. The more you realize the second personal coming of the Lord Jesus, the more lively ought your Christianity to be.

I remember when I was a school-boy I could wake up, however tired with a long journey, when I began to draw near home. Soon as I saw the old hills, and trees, and chimneys, the sense of wearines was gone, and I was all alive. The prospect of soon seeing much loved faces, the joy of thinking of a family gathering, all this was able to drive sleep away. Surely it ought to be the same with us in the matter of our souls. The night is far spent, and and the day is at hand. Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry. Then let us cast off every work of darkness. Let us put on the whole armor of light. Let us be ashamed of our past drowsiness. Let us awake, and sleep no more.

Seeing A Vain Vision.

A correspondent of the Providence Journal gives an outline of a sermon preached at Martha's Vineyard Camp-meeting, Aug. 26th, by Rev. Edgar F. Clark, of Providence, R. I. The congregation, we are told, "was highly entertained," and during the latter part of the discourse there "were frequent outbreaks of laughter at its pungent satires." His text was Mat. 6: 10, "Thy kingdom come." No one well instructed in "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" could teach such notions as are some of those to which he gave utterance. Think of a Methodist minister thus entertaining a "large" audience:

"The condition of the times indicates the success of the gospel. The spread of knowledge, the growth of invention, even the improvements of military agents, are hastening the result. By-and-by some one will invent a military weapon by which one can destroy 500,000, and then war must cease. The history of this gospel, also points to this consummation. Christianity has passed successively through the eras of contempt, persecution and favor, and is now passing out of the era of literary criticism. The majority of the thinking young men in Germany are tending towards orthodoxy. The Bible teaches that the stone cut out of the mountain shall fill the whole earth. Among the features of this kingdom, one will be that death shall be destroyed. Even its pains shall cease. It will be thought no harm to administer anaesthetics to relieve the pain of those who are dying in a state of prepation. The terrors of death especially will be taken away. When the kingdom of God is fully established, this world will be enjoyed. The dark ages originated the idea that a Christian must be gloomy, and the shadow of that darkness still lingers. The time is coming when it will be a man's duty to visit the White Mountains, if he can, as much as go to church. Again, when this kingdom is set up, sin will be very odious and dictating. The day is coming, too when religion will be a matter of pleasure. At first, people were led to God by terror. After that was the reign of duty. Many have the notion that, to become a Christian, one must give up the pleasures of this life. But religion will soon be considered lovely in itself. Any one who can tell of it will be welcome. [The prevailing disregard of old men as ministers was here rebuked.] The day is coming when people will repent and come to God with smiles."

When "the angel of the Lord went out and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand" in one night the slaughter was deemed prodigious, but Mr. Clark's "military weapon by which one can destroy 500,000 thousand," throws the angel of the Lord in the shade! It is true we had read the Psalmist's invitation, "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth! He maketh the wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire" (Ps. 46: 7, 9), but we never dreamed that "the improvements of military agents are hastening this result," and that the instrumentality that Jehovah will employ to make "wars to cease" will be an infernal machine that by one fell swoop annihilates half a million! But Mr. Clark knows, of course, for he speaks with positiveness.

If "the majority of the thinking young men in Germany are tending towards orthodoxy," then we have been sadly misinformed heretofore, or the number of "thinking young men" bears a small proportion to the thoughtless.

But criticism is unnecessary. We have simply copied the report for the purpose of indicationg the vagaries into which men plunge when they leave the word, and give loose reign to fancy. Mr. Clark's mode of the establishment of the kingdom of God is very different from the manner of its introduction as revealed in the Scripture; and the state of things when it is set up will be very different from what he anticipates. Be not deceived: we must still "through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God" (Acts 14: 22.) Christ's terms of discipleship will be unchanged while the age lasts: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me" (Lk. 9: 23). A repentance that knows nothing of "godly sorrow" for sin—that has less to do with tears than "smiles"—will be found at last acceptable to God as was Israel's act of putting the ark of God on a new cart when it ought to been borne by the Levites.—Advent Herald.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 12, 1871.

OUR friends will rejoice with us, to learn that Edwin, whose serious illness was announced last week, is now in a fair way to recovery.

A LETTER from Br. Fassett and some other interesting matter came to hand too late for this week's paper. Look out for something good next week.

DON'T neglect to call the attention of your friends to the support of THE TIMES. We never needed additions to our subscription list more than now; and the paper was never more likely to do good than now. Help it and you will help forward the truth. Help now!

WE observe in the San Francisco Eve. Bulletin of Nov. 25, (Saturday) the following notice:

> Central Presbyterian church, Tyler street, between Taylor and Jones.—Preaching at 11 a. m and 7½ p m by the pastor, Rev. T. M. Cunningham. Subject of evening discourse: "Is there a Hell?" or the doctrine of Eternal Punishment.

We hope there was some competent note-taker on hand, representing some one of the city papers, so that Eld. Fassett may have at least a synopsis to predicate a reply upon. We understand that Constable's pamphlet has excited considerable healthy interest in San Francisco in the views he so ably promulgates. Dr. Cunningham is said to be a man about forty years of age, and much abler than Dr. Scott, who vouchsafed a series of discourses on "Eternal hell-fire" for the benefit of the Adventists last winter. The more discussion on this subject the more light; and if the debate is in proper temper, the better for the truth.

MEETING OF THE W. A. C. P. ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING FOR 1871.

The Association met in the A. C. Chapel on Green St. Chicago, Wednesday p. m. Dec. 6, 1871 Eld. Wm. Sheldon, Vice President in the chair.

Business Committee: F. Burr, A. S. Calkins, O. S. Knapp. The session was spent in general discussion. On Thursday morning, the Secretary's report was read and accepted. When Eld. Himes, the President arrived and took the chair. The amendments to the constitution proposed in THE TIMES were taken up for consideration, and pending the discussion, the Association adjourned.

On Friday the proposition which had been made to set aside the action already taken for a change in the basis of membership and effect the change by the formation of a new Association was taken into consideration. The plan was to form a new Society, whose membership should consist solely of delegates from the churches, and for the Trustees of the present Association to lease all its present effects to the new society for a long term of years.

The reports of the Committee on a Constitution for the new Society were thoroughly canvassed, but it was finally decided to adhere to the plan already proposed and now in process, and give it a fair trial. Only two members dissented from this course.

J. Hilliard, S. C. Raymond, and F. M. Berry were appointed a committee to nominate officers for the coming year, and presented the following names.

For President: J. V. Himes.
For Vice-President: D. R. Mansfield.
Eor Secretary: W. L. Himes.
For Treasurer: L. P. Fox.
For Auditor: O. S. Knapp.
Publishing Commmittee: A. S. Calkins, L. H. Davis, D. Mathewson.
For Editor of TIMES: Joshua V. Himes.
Editorial Committee: N. Field, H. G. McCullock, L. C. Collins.

Br. Knapp declining to serve, Br. F. Burr was nominated in his place, and the nominees were then unanimously elected.

The amendments to the Constitution proposed in THE TIMES, were then adopted as follows:

ART. XII. Sec. 1. The stock of this association is hereby made transferable, by the transfer of the certificate issued therefor, endorsed in blank by the original holder, his heirs, executors or administrators; and the entering of such transfer upon the books of the Association. The date of said entry of the transfer shall be the date of the transfer.

Sec. 2. This article shall take effect and be in full force from and after its adoption.

Amendment to article XI. To amend Art. XI. so that it shall read: "This constitution may be altered or amended at any regularly called meeting of the Association by a vote of five-sixths of the members present at said meeting: this amendment to be in force from and after its adoption.

On motion of Br. Burington the Association tendered their thanks to the Church in Chicago for the hearty welcome and hospitality we had received. Adjourned. WM. L. HIMES, Sec'y.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

At the last annual meeting of this Association it was adjourned to meet in the late fall or early winter of 1871, at such a time and place as the officers might select. Previous to that time our annual session had been held in connection with a campmeeting in the State of Illinois. For various reasons it was deemed best to give up the General campmeeting of the Association, and leave the field to be occupied by the State Conference.

There is a prejudice existing against 'business meetings" of our Conferences and other societies that cannot be too strongly deprecated. If men should be 'not slothful in business,' in their worldly relations, how much more should they be diligent in that which relates to the spread of the gospel of the kingdom, and the gathering of souls to Christ. It should be established as a principle, that either our Conferences and Associations should be dissolved, and every thing be left to irresponsible individual action; or, else, they should be faithfully attend, and the necessary time for deliberation be freely afforded for every matter at all worthy of consideration. And of all unkind things, nothing can be more so than for brethren to neglect to attend our Religious Business Meetings and then find fault, and withhold sympathy and support, because while those present have acted according to their best judgment, they have not met the wishes of the absentees. And it is as true of a cause as of an individual that neglected business tends to ruin.

The primary object of our gathering at this time is to transact the business of our Association. In order to do this intelligently it will be necessary that we have a clear statement of its work during the sixteen months since the last report, and also of its present condition and future prospects. And first we shall call your attention to the Treasurer's Report.

[This did not reach the printer in season for this week's paper.]

THE TIMES, our weekly paper, is the principal publication of the Association, and in spite of some adverse influences it is in a prosperous condition. The receipts for subscription have been larger than in any previous year. At the present time we are printing about 4,300 copies a week.

The Association should candidly consider at this session the alternative of an increase in the price, or the adoption of the "pay in advance" system. It would perhaps be better to have a large free list, and fewer dilinquents than at present. Our free list the past year amounted to $470. We have taken pains to send to none who were not worthy; and believe that in almost or quite every instance the gift of the paper has been a genuine missionary investment.

Our losses by dilinquents have been seven hundred dollars. In these cases persons take the paper from the office for one or more years, and have the reading of it; and finally when a bill of from one to six dollars has accumulated, stop the paper and refuse to pay arrearages. Of course the law is with us: but we have no disposition to seek redress by it. We prefer to suffer the wrong. It is a question for consideration at this time, whether it will not be better for us on the whole, to have a list of 3,000 paying subscribers, than a much greater one made up largely of dilinquents. Our present list should bring us in nearly $8,000 a year instead of $5,400. We observe from the last report of the Treasurer of the Eastern Society, that the dilinquents upon their list are in about the same or even a greater proportion. Would it not be better to provide a fund to pay for the papers sent to the poor and in missionary fields, and adopt the advance pay system as a rule, even though the list of subscribers should be somewhat reduced thereby?

The Quarterly has been suspended for the present. Of the causes which led to this we need not here speak. Suffice it to say that we hope to resume its publication within another year. The two volumes published are universally acknowledged to be one of the most valuable contributions Advent literature has yet received. Those who have the set should preserve it carefully, as they will not be easily replaced.

The Good Way has been published occasionally, and in time we hope to issue it regularly each month. At present our means are not adequate to the expense, if we also continue our donations of tracts and books. There are times and exigencies for the use of every means of spreading abroad the truth. Sometimes it is by preaching, or by conversation; again it is by a card, a paper, a tract, a book, or a periodical regularly provided for a season. The wise workman will use each and all of these as opportunity and discretion may indicate.

The present demand for printed matter for free distribution was never exceeded. Some of our more valuable books have been desired for this purpose. As it was impossible for us to provide them gratis, we have issued a cheap edition of Eld. Whitmore's work upon the Doctrine of Immortality, putting it at so low a price that the poorest could afford to have at least one copy to lend or give away. Besides, we have given away many copies of this valuable publication, more particulary in new fields in the South and on the Pacific, and where we have heard of persons inquiring into or partially interested in our faith. Of course all this work is, upon the whole, a financial loss to the Association; but we anticipate returns in the way of new converts to the faith, and new friends and supporters of the gospel. "The liberal soul shall be made fat," is as true of individuals in associated capacity, as of single persons. We are in an immense and ever widening field, which it is simply impossible to supply with living preachers. The press is our only remaining resource, and even where the ministers go it can greatly aid them. Where they cannot go, its work is indispensable. Much has been said about this matter in time past, and some are fully awake to the importance, and the necessities of the case. But no one can realize the demand for printed matter for missionary work until they visit one of our publishing offices, and read the pressing calls from every quarter. We have no doubt that ten thousand dollars could be judiciously expended in the coming year in this direction alone. Of course we may not hope to receive this amount; but we do pray that God by his Spirit will so impress his people with a sense of the importance of the truths we publish relating to Jesus' advent, that "all the tithes may be brought in," from every church, household and individual, that God may be proved by us as he never has been before.

The story of the change of our printing press has been told at large in the columns of THE TIMES and need not be rehearsed here. Suffice it to say that by the liberality of Brn. C. S. Sherman, N. W. Wait, S. P. Clark, H. D. Sharpe, W. T. Doremus, B. F. Brownwell, and C. R. Griggs, $1,200 of the sum necessary to effect the change has been provided for. The remaining $200 has been pledged or paid, in; and the whole amount is furnished by a very few persons. The cause generally has not been burdened, yet we have an excellent new press, worth $2,200, and warranted to last for years. We cannot repress an anxiety that it should be kept running, at least, every day, continually turning off publications to warn all who will read of the events soon coming upon the earth, and instruct them in the truth of God's word concerning the nature and future destiny of man.

He is a careless observer who fails to see that this last is one of the vital questions of the hour. It crops out everywhere. Let a newspaper open a column for "Queries," and straightway the editor is pressed with questions upon the duration of sin and suffering, the nature of death, the immortality of the soul, etc. Let a minister announce that he will speak from topics selected by the people, and immediately these are pushed upon his attention. One thing is certain, the old theological theories of these questions being forsaken; and even those who endeavor to retain them are busily engaged in remodeling their structure, to meet the irrepressible demand for a change of some kind. Men are seeking for light, and many are captured by false but popular systems of spiritism or restorationism, or an infidel materialism. Thousands stand ready to embrace the simple Bible truth if we will but reach them before their minds have been perverted by some taking error, some specious satanic counterfeit of the truth. Every man of us should cry aloud—if not literally, at least by unflagging exertions in conversation, correspondence, preaching or sustaining preachers, and scattering printed matter with a judicious, but at the same time liberal hand.

We ought perhaps to mention that when about August of last year, it became necessary that we should have new type for THE TIMES that Br. E. Wolcot gave us $300, while others made up the other $100 which we expended for this object.

And it should also be mentioned that Br. L. C. Collins not only gave us the manuscript of his valuable treatise upon the Parable of Luke 16, but also gave with it a liberal sum to pay for making the plates; a generous gift, that ought to be, like the work itself, widely known and appreciated. We have published new editions of Eld. Sheldon's works, and one new book from his pen—The Life Beyond Death, of 144 pages. These have all been more or less widely scattered by sales and gifts. The total of our various publications for the sixteen months past, is upwards of three million pages. Some of the works remain upon our shelves; but new editions will be demanded soon of Collins', Whitmore's, and Sheldon's writings, besides our old tracts, and some new ones by Fassett, Taylor and others.

Our work presses us. The demands upon our resources as a society are inordinate. Perhaps what we need most of all is a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit of God, as individuals, and as a people, to give us more of the mind that was in Christ, and fill our souls with the love of the business he left for us to do—go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature—instead of which we hardly tell it at home. There is a lack of concentration of forces and aim; we need closer union in a common purpose. We need to be so imbued with the Spirit of God that personal matters and feelings will be forgotten, or sunk out of sight in the presence of the responsibilities of our mission. Let every man woman and child work, each in their place, and all together; without envyings, without strifes, or jealousies; and for a common purpose—the dissemination of the gospel of the kingdom, and the preparation of a people to meet our coming Lord. Let us make use of every gift, in every department, and heartily sustain and co-operate with all our opproved public servants, whether working in the pulpit or at the desk. In behalf of the Board.

Notice.

I am confined to my bed unable to even raise my head from my pillow, and can only dictate this to a friend who writes for me. I wish to say that I thank my correspondents for their kindness, but can neither arrange to meet their calls nor answer their letters in any other way than this, for some time to come. Pray for Dedication of Zion's Chapel.

Within the last year the Advent Christian church at Springville, Wis. resolved to build for themselves a place of worship. The church was not large, or rich, yet they felt the need of a place of worship and resolved to raise means and build. Br. P. W. Hough, their minister, took hold with them in good earnest, and not only influenced the people to give, but set a good example by giving liberally himself.

A building committee, consisting of Phillip Bouffleur, Seth Hamilton, and Daniel Faver was chosen, who have worked hard, and carried the thing through to completion, showing what faith and works will do when put together. The result is a neat, convenient sanctuary of twenty-four by forty feet, which is arranged to accommodate some two hundred worshippers. It is not only being a blessing to the people, but an ornament to the village. It has a bell, which is important for calling the people together for their various meetings. The building committee reported a debt of about three hundred dollars; and about one hundred was raised towards paying this.

The services were opened by Eld. Hough, who read the hymns, and Scriptures, and offered prayer. Sermon by Eld. J. V. Himes, from 1 Tim. 1: 15. "What a friend we have in Jesus." The house was crowded, and union, and the best spirit manifested. May prosperity attend Pastor and people.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Note From San Francisco.

ED. TIMES: There was a copious shower, or succession of showers, yesterday; and the rain and wind were severe at church-going hours. But Mrs. Fassett had good audiences. She preached on "The finished work of Christ." Her texts were from John's gospel, chs. 17 and 19: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." "It is finished." She discoursed on the former in the morning; appointing the latter for the evening's sermon. One was on the work fulfilling the law; the other was on the work of submission. The morning discourse was a lucid and impressive review of the law that has been, and a discernment of the law particular that had been fulfilled in Christ. The necessity of a sacrificial offering before Christ, as indicated from the day the Lord God prepared skins for the Adamite and his wife; as shown in the preferred offering on Abel's altar; as proved by the directions to Noah concerning the clean easts and the satisfaction declared ver the incense of his offering; as daily told in the ritual afterwards rescribed for tabernacle and temple; —all these were brought out in a procession of Scripture narrative, and gical reasoning unto Christ who uperseded the law, so that the whole eaching of the morning must always emain with the favored auditors. It was a well clinched discourse.

Twelve were to have been baptised at Vallejo, by Eld. Fassett, yesterday. Whether the storm prevented the ceremony, for the day, or not, I do not now. Eld. Howell says it is "a enuine work" in Vallejo.

The legislature of the State meets at Sacramento next Monday. It is a ity that there is no campaign organised for that city, in behalf of the Advent church. This winter is to be an auspicious time—it "looks." A.

Is The Prophecy Fulfilled?

BY THE REV. J. WESLEY HORNE.

PROPHECY.

In the second chapter of Paul's second epistle to the Thessalonians, from the first to the fourth verse, inclusive, is recorded the following startling prophecy: "Now we beseech you brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped or called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

FULFILLMENT

Walking slowly and meditatively up the grand nave of St. Peter's at Rome, through marvellous groups of statuary on the right hand and on the left, and passing, after a lingering delay, the celebrated bronze canopy—ninety-two feet in height, and supporting a golden cross ninety-five feet higher—the whole upborne by four richly gilded spiral columns, under the great dome and over the high altar of white marble, and the tomb of St. Peter, surrounded by eighty-nine ever-burning lamps—you come at length to the Tribune, containing the Cathedra Petri of Bernini, enclosing, as it is said, the veritable episcopal chair of St. Peter.

The conception of the artist which is embodied in this Tribune is, to my mind, at once one of the boldest and most blasphemous of human inventions. A foundation of polished marble—partly black, partly red—sweeps round with the curve of the chancel. On this platform, at suitable distances from each other, stand four collossal figures in bronze, heavily gilt, and flowing robes. These figures represent the Church on earth. The right hand of each as extended to receive a foot of the Cathedra Petri, or Throne of St. Peter—which is itself shining with golden tapestry—and to help support it on high. Then, from above, descending as it were from the bending heavens, volumes of golden clouds roll down, and touching the throne from behind, assist to sustain it lifted up between heaven and earth.

Beside the throne there stand guardian figures, and over it are angels holding "the keys of the church," and the Pope's tiara. Meanwhile, among the volumes of clouds, are cherubim and seraphim, and all the host of heaven, exulting at the elevation of the papal power over every other power of the universe; and the Holy Spirit, the Heavenly Dove, gives the sanction of the divine presence; while the beams of his glory stream out in every direction, and away beyond the sphere of the angels!

While you stand gazing with awe and admiration, which you cannot, if you would, hinder from arising, you catch the grand conception of the idolatrous artists work: it is that of a church militant and the church triumphant uniting and vieing with each other to lift up and sustain the throne of the vicegerent of Christ above every other "throne, and dominion, and principality, and power" in the world.

Now, it is known long to have been decreed in the Papal church that if any one of the popes should be so favored of heaven as to continue twenty-five years in the Pontificate, to him should be granted the special honor of a grand jubilee; and that, arrayed in his garments of purple and gold, with a golden chain about his neck, and a ring of authority on his finger, he should have the opportunity, as Vicar-General of Christ, of ascending the throne of St. Peter, in St. Peter's at Rome; and there, "sitting in the temple of God," with cross and crown, crook and crosier, mitre and scepter, of giving his blessing, as Holy Father, to the thousands upon thousands that might be gathered to do him homage, amid the peal of organs, and blare of trumpets, and shoutings of multitudes, and pomp and pageantry of church and State.

It seems too bad, in this connection, to mention that right there, under the very shadows of the gorgeous Tribune, I was told that the so-called "ancient, wooden, episcopal chair of St. Peter," enclosed in the Cathedra Petri, is believed to be nothing better than an old wooden chair of Mohametanism brought from Constantinople, in one of the many forages made by the church.

At any rate, the thing would be only in keeping with the bronze statue of Jupiter near the transept on the right—mended toward the head so as to make a statue of St. Peter, whose brazen toe has been well nigh kissed away by the lips of the faithful.

Did any of them ever hear of Madame de Stael's excuse for this and other deceptions of the holy Mother Church? "We shame not," says that profound critic in Corinne, "in pagan trophies which art has hallowed. The wonders of genius always awaken holy feelings in the soul, and we pay homage to Christianity in tribute to all the best works that other faiths have inspired." Well might "Oswald smile at this explanation." So do we.

The chapel does not look large in the surrounding magnitude of the mighty church, but it easily accommodated, with its full quota of paintings and marbles, and altars and organs, the most august body of gorgeously robed divinity that could be assembled in Christendom. It is a most remakable and memorable fact, chronicled by the reporters, for the public press at the time, that when the great Council came to vote on the question of Papal Infallibility, at the very hour of the day, clouds and darkness unprecedented overspread the city, out of which shot fierce lightnings and burst roaring thunders, completely drowning the voices of the voters: and that when the record of the result reached was to be read, so greatly the darkness deepened that torches had to be introduced to illuminate the fearful scene and render the reading possible.

But the bull of infallibility was issued, and in a day or two the Emperor of the French—"the eldest son of the Church"—declared war against Prussia. We know the sequel. The Italian army breached the walls of the Eternal City, and took possession of the capital of the Papacy; the Prussian army forced its way to Paris and took possession of the French Empire. Did not the hand of God smite the one and the other—the blaspheming Papacy and the empire which supported it—at the same moment, and did not the two Babylons—the city and the temporal power—fall together?—J. W. Horne, in Methodist.

An Appeal to Christians.

We have glanced through Scripture and gathered up the sum of its testimony as to the events which are impending. And now with all these predictions before us, what is to be the effect of the inquiry on our souls? Shall we not look into these things, and prayerfully and patiently inquire whether we have as yet understood God's mind respecting them? When he speaks so constantly and impressively of judgment, can we have been right in taking it for granted that the gospel would silently progress, Christianity gradually spread, and the world's condition continually improve, till the millennium should commence? And can we think of these things—can we look at the unconverted around us hastening unconsciously to destruction, without being moved? Can we behold the worldling like a man in a boat drifting down a rapid stream, with his back to the danger, entertaining himself, as he looks up the river, with all the gay, pleasant objects which are flitting past him, whilst each moment bears him onward to the falls, where he must ere long be dashed to pieces, without attempting to rescue him from the overthrow? Can we think of such a doom as awaits the world in which we sojourn, and not weep over its guilty condemned inhabitants? Did Jesus weep over one city, and say, "If thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes," and shall not our hearts melt—shall not our tears flow, for a whole world that lieth in wickedness, and daily ripens for destruction?

The hour of judgment, near as it may be, has not yet come. The door of mercy still stands open: yea, as yet it opens into the scene of those heavenly delights and bridal glories which Christ and the church shall share, ere he comes forth from the wedding to execute vengeance on his foes. And shall we not use the opportunity to sound forth the gospel of God's grace? Shall we not warn and entreat our poor fellow-sinners, and earnestly beseech him, as the apostle Paul did, to be reconciled to God? Knowing the judgments which await the world around us, knowing that grace has rescued us from these judgments, and that when they are executed we ourselves shall be with him who executes them, is it possible that we can selfishly enjoy the thought of our own security, and leave the poor world unrewarded, the grace of Christ and the Father's love unproclaimed, or poor sinners uninvited—unurged—UNINTREATED to flee to the shelter of his open arms? O for more earnest love to Christ and deeper compassion for poor souls.

Brethren, the time is short. The moments glide rapidly away. Soon will the only opportunity be gone that we shall ever have of confessing our Master, and seeking his glory, in our midst of a world which either rejects him openly, or the more decidedly rejects him in reality, for owning him in appearance and in word. May his own Spirit animate us. May our hearts be soft, and tender and humble. May the communion with him cause the fountains of compassion for those around us to gush forth. May souls be gathered to his arms of mercy. May his people be stirred up to pray, and watch and labor. May we humble ourselves, and stir up and exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching!—From a Tract.

The World On Fire.

It is stated that during the great conflagration of Chicago, there were those who in their terror believed that the end of the world had come, and that the general conflagration of the world had commenced and was even then raging.

No doubt many would regard the expression of their excited imagination, with emotions akin to merriment; and still, there is no evidence, that the approach of that event will be marked by any indications of a more terriffic character, than what they saw, and what is so simultaneously occurring all over the country, and perhaps the world.

So much has been said within a generation past, with regard to this awful and interesting event, by those who assumed to know the time, that while their prophecies in relation to the dates have failed, many have come to look upon the event itself as little more than a myth. But we have reason to believe, that the words of our Savior, and the prophets and apostles upon this matter, are as true and literal, as those with regard to the deluge, in connection with which they are given, with the assurance that the latter should come with as little observation as the former—in which none then living, saw any signs of the approach of such an event; but were engaged in their accustomed business and pleasure—marrying, and giving in marriage until the day that it came upon them,

It is probable that the most of those who really believe in, and are looking for the destruction of this world by fire, in accordance with Scripture, that —"The day of the Lord will come like a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up"—are expecting that it will be brought about by what we consider supernatural causes; but of this there is no evidence, and perhaps no probability, since a little chemical change in the element, which compose earth, and water, would produce combustion. And such change may be imperceptibly going on; or it may be hastened by these very events which are transpiring in different parts of the world producing the signs spoken of in the Scripture, the fire, and smoke, the darkness of the sun, the redness of the moon, earthquakes in divers places, with the general fulfillment of prophecy, knowledge going to and fro in the earth, etc., etc.

To those who have perished in the calamities of the last few days, it is of little account, whether it was in connection with a general or a local conflagration—whether by themselves alone, or in company with the world's inhabitants, and the same may be said of us, as to the manner of our taking off.

We know that we live in a century of wonders, and in which the events of a former age are crowded into a brief decade; that with the increased momentum, a crisis must be reached, and though it may come as a thief in the night, we are assured that the believer need not be taken by surprise. They have but to heed the counsels of the Savior to watch and be ready, knowing that the end of this world may come to them at any moment; and that while the ungodly are anticipating it with terror, they look upon indication of its approach with deep interest and joy, knowing that their redemption draws near.

The object of revealing the fact of such an event, was not to terrify; but that it might serve as an admonition to faithfulness and sobriety; as the apostle adds "Seeing then, that all these things shall be dissolved what manner of persons ought ye to be, in all holy conversation and godliness."—Cor. Am. Baptist.

A Delicate Subject.

Mr. Editor: No one who has carefully considered the present necessities of the world, and the very great demand of the age for such a type of Christianity as can accommodate itself to the times, will fail to perceive the sad influence almost everywhere exerted on the enterprises of the church by a class of persons generally denominated "fogies," "croakers." The press, and the religious press especially, is under the most solemn obligations to so mark, if possible, these disturbers of human progress, that their power over others shall be paralyzed, and that they shall be kept in a kind of petrified state during their earthly sojourn, being regarded by all the living, as they justly deserve to be, simply as relics of other years.

It is worthy of notice that, with the wonderful improvements which every day is making in the doctrines, the spirit and the life of the disciples of the once despised Nazarene, these "croakers" are rapidly becoming more numerous and meddlesome. Neither reverence for the sacred ministry, subordination to the officers in Zion, nor respect for wealth and position, seems to awe them into silent submission. They presume to find fault with most of the ways in which money is raised for adorning our places of worship; they pronounce much that is done to make the house of God attractive to the world an unjustifiable extravagance; and they not only refuse to join in fashionable amusements, but they even express doubts in relation to the influence of such amusements on the cause of Christ.

Another very palpable characteristic in these "croakers" is that they rarely, if ever, become leaders in any important effort; but whether this is owing to the fact that they will not, or that they cannot lead, in the present refined state of society, it is not easy to determine. It cannot be denied, however, that they often aid others in doing, when the thing done is far from being in harmony with their choice.

Nor should it be overlooked that these "croakers" are, on the whole, persons of rigid Christian deportment, conscientiously walking according to old precedents in the church, and that they find very many inspired examples to justify a large portion of their conduct. Indeed, their is reason to believe that in the line of faultfinding they have followed the prophets, the apostles and their gracious Redeemer, at a becoming distance, a distance which could not be increased without sacrificing fidelity to their convictions of truth. But without further wearying your readers with incidents connected with these unfortunate people, permit me to suggest that they may either be quieted, or at least deprived of influence, by branding them with the refined and Christ-like name of "croakers;" and futhermore, that by introducing this epithet into our pulpits, and into the assemblies of the saints, we shall secure the peace if not the purity of many of our churches.—Am. Baptist.

THE TIMES, the only periodical published by Advent Christians West of Rochester, N. Y., will enter upon its eighth year in 1872. Its success in the past has been flattering, and its managers intend that in the future it shall deserve even greater prosperity and more rapid growth.

A leading feature of the paper for at least six months, will be a discussion between the Editor, and Eld. Clark Braden, a noted debater of the Disciple church. Each paper will contain an article from each of the debaters—an affirmative and reply.

The discussion will be based upon the Scriptures, and involve (1) the nature of man; and (2) the future reward and punishment—questions of vital moment and intense interest, as every person who has felt the popular pulse well knows.

In the first proposition Eld. Braden affirms the endless conscious existence of the spirit of man.

In the second the editor of THE TIMES will affirm the unconscious state of the dead, and the resurrection their only hope.

In the third he will affirm that literal destruction is the doom of the finally impenitent, while eternal life is the gift of God through Christ.

In the fourth and last proposition Eld. Braden affirms that the final punishment will consist in banishment from God and the society of all pure beings, in a state of endless conscious existence.

The person who wishes to read both sides of this question in condensed, pithy form, will hardly have a better opportunity.

Besides the above, the Editor will furnish his "Journal," or narrative of the progress of Adventism in the parts he may visit, with incidents of travel, experience, the past history of the cause, and its present prospects.

The editorial department will be kept up, and filled with articles upon live questions, and "the present truth" in all its features. The signs of the times, fulfillment of prophecy, and everything indicative of "the last times" will receive due attention.

We have many able correspondents, whose contributions have greatly strengthened THE TIMES in the past, and we anticipate even better things from them in the future.

The pages devoted to letters and extracts, and accounts of travel and missionary work must necessarily grow in interest as the field widens, and we have more workers, more writers, and more to narrate.

THE TIMES is not a "NEWS" paper; yet it will continue to give a weekly digest of the more important events of the day, at home and abroad—a terse record of the signs of the times, and indications of the approaching crisis of the world.

We shall give the news concerning Adventism all over the world, in brief, so far as we can obtain it.

We shall occasionally give pieces of music and illustrations that will interest all.

Finally, THE TIMES will, we think, deserve, and we know it needs, five hundred paying subscribers at once! Shall we have them?

Reader: Do you take THE TIMES? If not, subscribe for it at once. Try it a year, or for six months, at least. $2 a year; $1 for six months.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, Nov. 23. One day at home. It was a busy day, yet a very pleasant one. Things at the office are going on well, and God is with us.

I was happy to meet Br. James H. Whitmore, on a visit to us. He is author of the work on Immortality, one so much read and called for by the people. It is deservedly esteemed as the best work yet published on the subject. Br. W., I learn has in preparation another work upon the question of the destiny of the wicked. He has been almost persuaded to leave all pastoral duties for a time, and finish it. But the calls for pastoral work have been such that as yet he has not been able to leave this department of labor; and his new field in Rochester will demand for the present all his time and energies. But we shall have the work in good time; and when it shall be published it will greatly aid in clearing away the mists of the dark ages that has beclouded this momentous subject.

I am glad for the church in Rochester, and congratulate them on their good fortune in securing the labors of Br. Whitmore. They cannot fail to rise and prosper under his faithful work. And now after thirty years of wandering from place to place in the city to worship, let them all unite with their new pastor, to secure to themselves a permanent home where they can meet till the Master comes. This can and should be done. Towards night I took the cars for Chicago.

On the way I met Sr. Janes in the car, on her way home from Mich. She has had a good rest, and regained her health, and returns for work in the gospel field in Iowa. She will be welcomed home. Put up with Br. F. Burr, I found him well, and doing well in the church. The great conflagration affected them somewhat, but not materially as to their numbers, or determinations to keep at work as a church. Br. B. has just had a visit from Eld. J. Blain, who is now four score years old, quite well and vigorous. He is zealous in the propagation of the views of Mr. Dunn, an English author, who has written a work on the future age in which he argues, that most of the race will be saved either in this age, or the one to come. This idea is quite congenial with the feelings of Eld. B. and he is zealous in its propagation. This new view sets aside his former work, and preaching, and tends to unsettle the minds of those whose convictions on the subject of life and death have not been settled by thorough examination. Br. Burr invited him to preach, without any restriction, and advised those who wished, to get and read his pamphlet. This was right. Let us be kind and liberal. But in showing a liberal spirit towards those who may differ from us, it is not to be understood that we are prepared to receive every phase of doctrine that comes up. Many of us opposed the the truth we now teach for a time from early education and denominational influences, without making a full examination. We then felt that we had a reason (though it seems it was not a good one) for rejecting the doctrine. But we can't say now that we did not examine the Bible on the life and death question. We have had all the help, and all the time for the examination that we could ask, and have embraced the truth in the full light of the word shining upon us. And if we did not get it, it was not God's fault or our own. I believe we did "come to the knowledge of the truth" on this question. Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many [not few] walk in it: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leads unto life, and few [not many] there be that find it. (Mat. 7: 13, 14.) This teaching of Christ concerning the numbers of the saved and the lost in final, with me. Jesus knew, as the great prophet of God, and it is safe to follow him. It is not at all desirable to be "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." But to "hold forth that which is good." "Be settled and grounded in the truth." To "be steadfast and unmovable and always abounding in the work of the Lord" is desirable.

FRIDAY, Nov. 24. Took leave of Br. Burr and family, and came by rail, to Sparta, Wis., some 230 miles, and at midnight was welcomed by Dea. Barker to the hospitalites of warm hearts, room, and couch, which I was thankful for on this cold winter night. Rest is welcome to the weary, and never more so to me, than to-night.

SATURDAY, Nov. 25. Br. and Sr. Barker made arrangements to convey me to Springville, some thirty-two miles, as there was no stage. In the mean-time I had a short call from Br. S. W. Thurber, pastor of the church here. He is well, and is doing well for the church. He is liked much, and by all.

At 10 a. m. Br. John Palmer, took me to Springville. It was a cold tedious ride in an open buggy. After being so long in the sunny South, it was rather a severe test to my mortal system to ride nine hours in the face of a cold wind that smacked strongly of "zero." But on arrival we were kindly received by Br. Philip Bouffleur, the principal merchant of the place, and we soon forgot the exposure of the way, in the warm parlor and genial hospitality of the family. Eld. P. W. Hough, was a little way out of town, and so I could not see him till morning.

Springville lies about thirty miles south of LaCrosse. It is an old town, but small, containing some three hundred inhabitants. There is a Methodist chapel, and the new Advent house which is to be dedicated on the morrow.

SABBATH, Nov. 26. Met Br. Hough this morning. It was a dull cold day; but the people flocked in and crowded the new chapel. I spoke to them upon 1 Tim. 1: 1, 15. "It is a saying worthy of all acceptation that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." I showed that the chapel was built to carry out the plan of saving sinners, and of preparing a people for the coming of the Lord. The truth was received. The chapel is located on the high ground north of the village. It has a belfry and bell. The house is twenty-four by forty feet, and accommodates over two hundred souls. It is well lighted, and heated, and very comfortable, and easy both to speak and sing in. It is a model of neatness. economy, and beauty, in which the citizens of Springville may justly rejoice.

The church here is small, but full of life and enterprise. Br. Hough speaks to them once a month, and is very much liked. The prospects of the cause here are good. A collection to aid in paying the balance due on the chapel, amounted to one hundred dollars. I spoke in the p. m. and at night, to crowded audiances, who seemed to drink the truth down like water, great solemnity, and hope of good. Br. Hough is greatly rejoiced at the cheering prospect. We have had a glorious feast all day, and it is to continue over next Sabbath.

A FRAGMENT.

[The following fragment of the Editor's "Journal" came to hand, after its long wanderings in the United States mail bags, who knows where? just in time for this number of the paper. Some other of the Editor's letters were lost, including one business note. W. L. H.

THURSDAY, Oct. 5. Took leave of Br. Bickle, at the Cove and rode on to Flattwood, in company with Br. Rosebraugh, and Br. Elliott, of the Disciple church. We had an interesting conversation on the way about the faith, and soon we were at our place. At the post office I was introduced to many leading men of the place and vicinity, who were anxious to hear me on the Advent doctrine. The post master was very kind. He has a tannery here lying in ruins, from which before the war he made $2 000 a year in gold. He said that he could do as well now if he had a partner and could start the business again. Things are coming up in this country; but the marks of the war are everywhere apparent. As to farming the low lands are rich, and productive, but not healthful. The high lands are rich also, and well wooded; good fruit and grain country, and very healthy.

I spoke at 11 a. m. on the soul. I gave the Bible testimony, and made the Platonic philosophy look as bad as it deserved. It is a fable, at best. At 4 p. m., I spoke on the state of the dead. Several preachers were out, and one made an attempt to take notes. But as about all I said was Scripture, he held up after a little. Their theory was well riddled, and what course they will take remains to be seen. The people have got the light if their teachers have not. Br. Bishop, with whom I put up, is a faithful man, and very active and keeps the truth before the people here, and the cause is progressing. Br. S. F. Anderson was also with us, who is a prominent Baptist.

FRIDAY, Oct. 7. Clouds and wind, with signs of rain, and we have thirty miles to ride. Took an early start. Elder Rosebraugh, had to return home, and he left me in the care of Br Anderson, as my guide. As we passed on, the country became more wild, rough and mountainous, more like West Virginia, reminding me of my journey with Br. Silas Whitney last year in that State. Br. Anderson called my attention as we passed at the foot of one mountain, to a place called "the Mire Hole." We rode up to it. It is a place of about twenty-five feet in diameter. When cattle pass over it they sink into the mud and mire to die. The cannot get out, and none can well help them. How deep it is, or what is the cause of it is not known. So far, as they have sounded it they find only the bones of the dead animals in the mud.

At noon we stopped at Br. A. Cypert's, a well-to-do industrious farmer, who welcomed us. Being unexpected we enjoyed a plain meal, with them, of corn bread, milk and meat. I enjoyed the corn bread and milk much. It was a good common sense dinner. The only apology they made was, that they had no coffee, which is constantly used in this country. We now had twelve more miles, of the longest kind, I do not know how they measure them over the mountains, with every crook, wind and turn, through the valleys and creeks. But we got to the end of our journey just befose sunset, well jaded out. I find here a grocery store, a Masonic Hall, and a chapel, with six or eight log houses, most of which have no window, except the door, or the openings between the logs to let in the light. This is a center for the gathering of the people for miles around. But they have no saloon; the people are temperate. Dr. Fletcher, of Covington, Ky. visited this place some years ago, with others in the vicinity, and preached the gospel of the kingdom, with much success. He was very much liked, and in the language of these people he was a "powerful smart man." A Br. Percy also held forth afterwards, and gathered a church. But he has moved away, and in the absence of living teachers, a healthy organization the cause has died out. I do not find any one left, and so put up with Br. Baker, of the M. E. church, an excellent man.

SATURDAY, Oct. 7. I learn by my host that the notice of my meetings for to-day was given out, and will be widely spread. We have a clear day, the clouds of yesterday having passed off.

At 11 a. m. I preached among others to a number of preachers who seemed to be in an accord with what I had said, upon the two advents of Christ. I told some of them at the close, that we might differ on the time of his coming and the restitution, which I should treat upon to-morrow. They said they meant to hear me through, and see.

Eld. Stephen Treat, the Disciple minister invited me home to dinner, where we had an exchange of views. We found ourselves believing alike on most points, and with a better understanding I think he would be with me in all except his view of baptism. Like myself, he was converted and joined the Christian connection, in the East before A. Campbell's day. He has a deep Christian experience, and enjoys what many Disciple preachers scout as fanaticism. Some men of this stamp whom I have met seem to make their view of the law of pardon, the all in all of their religion. A good baptism of the Spirit and love of Christ I think would make a change in them for the better.

This p. m. and night I have got some rest, except that I have had to sing and talk all I ought to do. This missionary work is constant service, and it wears upon one. But I am enjoying the best of health. Yet I sometimes almost feel sad, when I think of home, and the thousands of our Israel in the more favored portions of the lands, with whom I have labored and taken sweet counsel. But in the hardships of pioneer life we have the sweet hope of a full reward when Jesus comes. And even now in the log cabin, where I write, I am blessed of him. I am content.

From Jabez Barnum, Jefferson Co. Kas.

Of Advent brothers and sisters scattered throughout the land, I would ask the question, Is our cause worth supporting? If so, how is it to be done? Have we as individuals nothing to do only to fold our hands in idleness in the great Redeemer's cause? We must work while the day lasts: the night will soon come when no man can work for the salvation of the fallen race. You all know the necessities of the publishing interest. And right here I will tell you how we can lift it out of embarrassment and clear our own consciences, and feel much richer by so doing. Let every one send from five cents up to $5 according to their ability, as the Lord has prospered them. This little contribution would probably average fifty cents for each contributor, and give a sufficient sum to supply all the present necessities. I am poor as to this world's goods, but rich in faith and in the promises of the blessed Redeemer. I take some consolation in the promise that the poor of this world shall be heirs of the kingdom. I have tried to help others to the light of the gospel. Now brethren and sisters try my plan: take hold in earnest, and you will see what great results will be accomplished from union of small things.

From Andrew Organ, Fillmore, Co. Minn.

I want to say a few words to the dear friends of the Advent cause. My soul rejoices in the glorious truths you believe and advocate. How often I have longed for the time when I could meet with those of like precious faith! I often see notices of meetings in THE TIMES which are held from ten to fifteen miles from here; but I am unable to leave home to attend at such a distance at present. I have a desire that some of the brethren in this region should visit this locality and preach the gospel of the kingdom. But this is a hard place. Sometimes I have spoken to the people in this vicinity the truths of God's word; but they are so unpalatable they are not received. I stand almost alone in defence of the truth. I have been a member of the M. E. church thirty-five years this fall, most of the time as either a steward or leader. But now they hardly recognize me as anything. I am often surprised at the opposition (if not hatred) they manifest to these glorious truths. Still it is what we might expect.

From C. W. Stevenson, Labette Co., Kas.

I really begin to feel acquainted with you, and there is a new love springing up in my heart for all the brethren. Although I am away off here in an out of the way place and have never been blessed with hearing the truth as it has fallen from the lips of an Advent minister, I feel that I have been signally blessed. I had never so much as heard of the glorious Advent truths of which THE TIMES is ever so full until last March, when an awakened brother sent me Eld. Grant's work, together with L. C. Collins's Address. These came from Eastern Michigan. After I began this perusal my mind became greatly perplexed, and I felt like casting from me as dangerously hetrodox anything that was not strictly in sympathy with my much coveted immortal-soul-ism opinion, But now, thanks be to the giver of every good and perfect gift, I feel that my faith and hope are on a material foundation, and I dearly love that which I had been taught to hate. Though I am not a member of any church I have ever tried to live a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. I am not ashamed to be called an Adventist since its has a meaning precious to me.

THE TIMES is the only friend I have in the faith here, with one exception, a young man who embraced the truth at the same time with myself. We are each trying in our feeble way to spread what we firmly believe to be emphatically Christ's gospel. Last spring I saw him thrust from the "Union" Sunday school simply because he asked a strictly Bible question, which if answered properly would forever kill the notion of man's immortality. People out here seem to fear rather than love the approach of truth. Their motto seems to be "Evil be thou my good."

From Eld. E. T. Hines.

I take this opportunity to answer through THE TIMES several letters and inquiries. During the past season through over work my health has been gradually undermined and a run of Remittant fever from which I am now recovering has admonished me that I must relinquish a part of my labor, and in future take more rest. I trust I shall be able to still speak on the Sabbath and attend to the pastoral duties assigned to me; and while I retire from the mission field in which I have spent a large portion of my time it is with feelings of sadness; for I think of the many isolated ones who have been continually crying, "Come over and help us." I shall have to give up my purposed winter campaign; and those to whom I have made promises concerning meetings will have to seek help elsewhere. I am not weary of the service of my Master. I can testify to his goodness and mercy, and trust by his assisting grace ever to be found at my post doing my whole duty. Remember me at the throne of grace.

From C. C. Marston.

I have been in Jackson Co. Iowa, holding meetings at Esgates and Iron Hill for nearly three weeks. Some good has been done. The cause all through this section was once in a flourishing condition. But the "glory has departed" measurably. Our time being necessarily limited at both places, all we could do by the help of the Lord was to labor for the recruiting of the church. This I feel assured was in a degree accomplished. It is necessary to get the church out of the way before sinners will move. Some made the "good confession" at Iron Hill and are waiting an opportunity to be baptised. The brethren are encouraged and by proper effort the cause will again rise and prosper as heretofore. I formed a very close attachment for the dear saints in this region. May the Lord bless them for their labor of love towards me and mine.

At Deep Creek, Clinton Co., the meeting commenced Tuesday eve. Nov. 28, in the midst of a furious snow storm. On the preceding eve. an M. E. divine lectured on "Annihilationism not of the Bible." The intention of the effort was to silence and annihilate Adventism. But it certainly was a very puerile effort. He very indignantly referred to the Doctrine of Immortality by J. H. Whitmore. Said he "had read it twice carefully; and could find fault with the whole of it." He is surely a hard case. He also spoke of "Mr. Himes" as a "dangerous fellow," and closed his personalities by referring to me as a renegade, travelling through the country scatter-

From Jabez Barnum, Jefferson Co. Kas.

Of Advent brothers and sisters scattered throughout the land, I would ask the question, Is our cause worth supporting? If so, how is it to be done? Have we as individuals nothing to do only to fold our hands in idleness in the great Redeemer's cause? We must work while the day lasts: the night will soon come when no man can work for the salvation of the fallen race. You all know the necessities of the publishing interest. And right here I will tell you how we can lift it out of embarrassment and clear our own consciences, and feel much richer by so doing. Let every one send from five cents up to $5 according to their ability, as the Lord has prospered them. This little contribution would probably average fifty cents for each contributor, and give a sufficient sum to supply all the present necessities. I am poor as to this world's goods, but rich in faith and in the promises of the blessed Redeemer. I take some consolation in the promise that the poor of this world shall be heirs of the kingdom. I have tried to help others to the light of the gospel. Now brethren and sisters try my plan: take hold in earnest, and you will see what great results will be accomplished from union of small things.

From Andrew Organ, Fillmore, Co. Minn.

I want to say a few words to the dear friends of the Advent cause. My soul rejoices in the glorious truths you believe and advocate. How often I have longed for the time when I could meet with those of like precious faith! I often see notices of meetings in THE TIMES which are held from ten to fifteen miles from here; but I am unable to leave home to attend at such a distance at present. I have a desire that some of the brethren in this region should visit this locality and preach the gospel of the kingdom. But this is a hard place. Sometimes I have spoken to the people in this vicinity the truths of God's word; but they are so unpalatable they are not received. I stand almost alone in defence of the truth. I have been a member of the M. E. church thirty-five years this fall, most of the time as either a steward or leader. But now they hardly recognize me as anything. I am often surprised at the opposition (if not hatred) they manifest to these glorious truths. Still it is what we might expect.

From C. W. Stevenson, Labette Co., Kas.

I really begin to feel acquainted with you, and there is a new love springing up in my heart for all the brethren. Although I am away off here in an out of the way place and have never been blessed with hearing the truth as it has fallen from the lips of an Advent minister, I feel that I have been signally blessed. I had never so much as heard of the glorious Advent truths of which THE TIMES is ever so full until last March, when an awakened brother sent me Eld. Grant's work, together with L. C. Collins's Address. These came from Eastern Michigan. After I began this perusal my mind became greatly perplexed, and I felt like casting from me as dangerously hetrodox anything that was not strictly in sympathy with my much coveted immortal-soul-ism opinion, But now, thanks be to the giver of every good and perfect gift, I feel that my faith and hope are on a material foundation, and I dearly love that which I had been taught to hate. Though I am not a member of any church I have ever tried to live a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. I am not ashamed to be called an Adventist since its has a meaning precious to me.

THE TIMES is the only friend I have in the faith here, with one exception, a young man who embraced the truth at the same time with myself. We are each trying in our feeble way to spread what we firmly believe to be emphatically Christ's gospel. Last spring I saw him thrust from the "Union" Sunday school simply because he asked a strictly Bible question, which if answered properly would forever kill the notion of man's immortality. People out here seem to fear rather than love the approach of truth. Their motto seems to be "Evil be thou my good."

From Eld. E. T. Hines.

I take this opportunity to answer through THE TIMES several letters and inquiries. During the past season through over work my health has been gradually undermined and a run of Remittant fever from which I am now recovering has admonished me that I must relinquish a part of my labor, and in future take more rest. I trust I shall be able to still speak on the Sabbath and attend to the pastoral duties assigned to me; and while I retire from the mission field in which I have spent a large portion of my time it is with feelings of sadness; for I think of the many isolated ones who have been continually crying, "Come over and help us." I shall have to give up my purposed winter campaign; and those to whom I have made promises concerning meetings will have to seek help elsewhere. I am not weary of the service of my Master. I can testify to his goodness and mercy, and trust by his assisting grace ever to be found at my post doing my whole duty. Remember me at the throne of grace.

From C. C. Marston.

I have been in Jackson Co. Iowa, holding meetings at Esgates and Iron Hill for nearly three weeks. Some good has been done. The cause all through this section was once in a flourishing condition. But the "glory has departed" measurably. Our time being necessarily limited at both places, all we could do by the help of the Lord was to labor for the recruiting of the church. This I feel assured was in a degree accomplished. It is necessary to get the church out of the way before sinners will move. Some made the "good confession" at Iron Hill and are waiting an opportunity to be baptised. The brethren are encouraged and by proper effort the cause will again rise and prosper as heretofore. I formed a very close attachment for the dear saints in this region. May the Lord bless them for their labor of love towards me and mine.

At Deep Creek, Clinton Co., the meeting commenced Tuesday eve. Nov. 28, in the midst of a furious snow storm. On the preceeding eve. an M. E. divine lectured on "Annihilationism not of the Bible." The intention of the effort was to silence and annihilate Adventism. But it certainly was a very puerile effort. He very indignantly referred to the Doctrine of Immortality by J. H. Whitmore. Said he "had read it twice carefully; and could find fault with the whole of it." He is surely a hard case. He also spoke of "Mr. Himes" as a "dangerous fellow," and closed his personalities by referring to me as a renegade, travelling through the country scattering the seeds of Atheism, etc. He warned the people against giving of their means to support any such pernicious system. His argument was simply a rehash of some of the main points made by Bartlett, Byers, Landis and others on the popular side of this question. I announced that I would review it, and thus notwithstanding the storm a large attendance was secured in the begining of our meeting and a good interest awakened. His effort to kill us turned to our advantage—praise the Lord? I leave the meeting here in the midst of a ripe interest. I ought to stay longer, but my appointments ahead are such that I cannot. God bless the dear brethren here and build them up. There is good chance for church extension in this community. They need a faithful and efficient pastor. May the Lord send them one.

From E. Wentworth, Galesburg, Ill.

I am a member of Dr. Edward Beecher's church. He preached this morning. He read Rev. 19 and 20, and preached from three texts, selected from different parts of the New Testament. His preaching was on the signs of the near future, when the angel standing on the clouds will thrust in the sharp sickle and reap the earth, for the harvest is now ready. The present generation stands connected with the last signs of the coming one. I wish that you could have heard him: you would have called him an Adventist, in regard to the fulfillment of prophecy.

[We understand that Dr. Beecher agrees with us as to the time we live in; but he looks for the spiritual rather than personal coming of Christ. Ed.]

From B. F. Cordray, Lakeville, Ind.

I have been listening for several nights to so-called orthodox preaching; and I heard nothing said of the blessed hope of Jesus' coming, or the resurrection of the dead. It was nothing in the singing but "A never-dying soul," going to heaven at death. The preaching corresponded with the singing. One preacher said he was saved forty years ago. I thought within myself that he had better be out of this place; for I could not see how a man could be saved, and yet danger all around him. It all sounded as though there was a crack in the bell. It had not the right jingle. May God open the eyes of the people that they may see, ere it is too late, and be saved at last in the coming kingdom, is the prayer of one who is still looking for Jesus' appearing and kingdom.

From Alex. McClure, Meadville, Pa

I have been a believer in the Lord's personal coming since '43. I was burned out on Monday morn of Chicago fire, at three a. m., by an incendiary. I am left in debt, and getting old, fifty-seven years. But hope to live to see the glorious advent of our Lord. I do earnestly desire the coming of the day of God. Never did I long for it more than now. I groan for the redemption of the body. The world has lost its charms. I ask an interest in the prayers of my brethren and sisters in Christ that God may be near me in my hour of trial.

I often look back to the many scenes of joy in worshiping with those I love. I can never forget when the light broke in on my mind, when I first heard the glorious truth of our coming King in the big tent in '43, under your preaching with Br. George Storrs, in Cincinnati. How many changes since that time, and disappointments have tried the faith of God's waiting ones. But the end is near, and we shall soon greet each other in the better land.

From Francis Wenz, Cincinnati, O.

I do not claim to have immortality in this present nature: it is the gift of God. I apprehend the Holy Scriptures to teach that by patient continuance in well doing I am to seek for honor, and glory, immortality and eternal life. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

While writing these few lines, I am put in mind of the glorious meeting we had yesterday, and particularly in partaking of the emblems that represent the death and suff[illegible] our Lord, who suffered for [illegible] example for us, that we [illegible] his steps; who did no sin, [illegible] any deceit found in his mouth. I am thankful to God that I through his grace, he is of God made unto me wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. And through him I expect to be changed from mortality to immortality, and then I shall be like Christ; for we shall see him as he is. Well might the apostle call it "that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of Jesus."

From P. G. Marsh, Lanesville, O.

If as some affirm, God places within man a deathless spirit at his creation, which is a part of God, as such it must of course be a good spirit. Reason asks, when an evil spirit gets possession of man: where does he get it from; and what becomes of the one God gave him at creation? One says the spirit returns to God who gave it, which can only be applied to such as have God's spirit. When a wicked man dies, with a wicked spirit, where did that come from and where does it go to. He certainly has lost his good spirit, if he ever had any: and if so who can prove God ever gave to man a good spirit, or a part of himself. I love the truth as well as ever. When I reflect on the enjoyment there must be for those who receive eternal life, I wonder if it can be my happy lot to be among the blest. Oh! what a warfare in this life! How much to overcome. I do try, and by the grace of God mean to overcome and at last sit down in the refreshing shades of the earth purified.

From Virgil Hunt, Ancona, Ill.

I have sent several copies of The Times to different persons on the "three months plan." One of them has become an out and out Adventist. He says he found a great many things in the Bible he never knew was there before. He is a member of the M. E. church. I wish I could send 100 copies on the same plan this winter. But as I cannot do so much, I am willing to do what I can in spreading the truth of Adventism; for I believe it to be the doctrine of the Bible; and that is the reason why I am an Adventist, and am not ashamed of my name.

From Mary A. Cleaver, McHenry, Co. Ill.

I take great pleasure in reading The Times, especially on the Lord's day, for it is all the preaching we have at present. I thank the Lord that he ever directed me to the Advent chapel in Chicago. My name is on the Baptist church book in Waukegan; but they will not give me a letter unless I join a church of the same faith. But I cannot believe that when I die I shall go to a sky kingdom; for I cannot find it any where in the Bible that we get our reward at death. I believe the dead sleep in the grave until the resurrection; and I think there is proof enough in the one chapter of the eleventh of John. I have prayed ever since I have lived here that the Lord would send his servants to this place to preach on the second coming of our Lord. Br. M. McCullock has preached to us several times within the last year, and I wish he could come and preach to us every Lord's day. I lend my paper to the neighbors, and live in hopes the doctrine will spread.

From L. C. McAdams, Huron Co. Mich.

I can say to-day I am more determined than ever to put my whole trust in Jesus, ever calling upon him for that spiritual strength that I need to overcome the evil that is in the world, I feel that it is a time when the children of God should be awake, and up and doing while the day lasts; for it seems to me that we are living in the last days. I often ask myself, am I doing all I can for the cause of Christ and to save sinners. As to many our means are small, but we are willing to do all we can. We are but few in number, and have been laboring under dark clouds of late; but thank God he is ever ready to hear the cries of his children; and we take courage to watch and pray more earnestly for those things we need. It is our prayer, that when Jesus comes he may find us a waiting people.

From Jabez Barnum, Jefferson Co. Kas.

I can hardly hold my peace when I think of so many like myself that hear no gospel truth except what we get from the Bible and our weekly visitor and preacher from The Times office. I have not heard or seen an Advent preacher for fourteen years past; and I don't know of an Advent believer within fifteen miles of where I live. But sometimes in conversing with my neighbors, especially those that read the Bible, they acknowlege that many of our views are Bible facts. We must do all we can by personal effort and tracts and papers; for thousands may be reached in this way who cannot be in any other, the field is so large and the laborers so few. Let us all do our duty in spreading the gospel far and wide, that when the heavens open and the King of kings descends from heaven accompanied with holy angels, you can clap your hands for joy and hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

From Frances Wright, Crooked Creek, Ind.

The hope of future glory grows brighter, and my spirit is much refreshed, since the grove meeting at Br. Towsley's. The voices of the brethren and sisters still ring in my ears. The language of Canaan which was spoken there, and the beautiful songs of Zion, enraptured my soul with delight. Yes, it makes me feel like saying with the Psalmist, "Oh! that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." The little band of waiting ones are still watching and praying for the coming of our Lord. We have the usual amount of opposition, with the rest; but that only serves to make us more diligent and fervent in our walk and conversation. For we know that "these light afflictions which are but for a moment will [illegible] t for us a far more exceeding [illegible] al weight of glory." I find [illegible] the greatest comforts in the w[illegible] a attending the prayer meetings. Let no trifle keep you away. Let your light shine, and while you work out your own salvation, pray for others. Talk to them of the goodness of God, of a Savior's love, and invite them to go with you.

Brief Extracts.

Br. Jno. W. Falwell, Monroe Co. Ohio. You have now sent me the paper five years, and have sent me five packages of tracts. When I began to read I was a full believer in the popular theology, on the nature of man, and other questions opposed to Adventism. To-day I am an Adventist. Besides this, two years ago you wrote me, to keep on as I was then working, and I would see fruit. And I have seen it. There are at least, two families, now, who are heartily Adventists. Indeed they are accused of making the doctrine a hobby; but they say they are so full of it, that it gushes right out. We mean to hold on and contend earnestly for the faith——————Br. A. B. Cushing, Barford, P. Q. Myself and wife have recently embraced the views that you advocate, and for holding and advocating them, were turned out of the Baptist church here. And my dear brother, you cannot think, at least I cannot express, what a blessing we had for days after our expulsion. We had a little foretaste of the joy and blessedness there is in suffering for Christ's sake. We thank the Lord that they did just as they did. I told them the Lord did not give me such great light as he did, in so peculiar a manner, to have me hide my light under a bushel. And I promised them and my Lord also, that I would let my light shine. I am scattering Whitmore's, Collins', Sheldon's and other works; and I do think The Times is one of the best mediums to get the truth before the people. Pray for us. ——————Sr. R. Maloy, Three Rivers, Mich. I am making my papers preach in this place. There are a good many reading them, and say they do not believe in the hell as it used to be preached, but still believe in torment forever. I do not think that is any better.——————Sr. M. E. Osterhout, Byron, Ill. I have received the paper and tracts you sent, but words will fail to express the happiness I feel in reading their contents. I am surrounded with the light literature of the day; but to me, one of your papers is worth more than they all. I have commenced distributing tracts, and I pray earnestly that the truth may sink deep in the heart of some, dispelling the errors that have so long held them in darkness. How I wish some earnest worker would come here and preach to the people. Some there are, I think, who would embrace the truth.——————Br. T. H. Rupel, Sumption's Prairie, Ind. I truly have not felt so well and so much like worshipping God as I have for the past few months. The signs are thickening fast, and his appearing is very near. So we (who are Christ's) may lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh. "Thy kingdom come," is my prayer.——————Br. G. W. Kimball, Iowa. We have some splendid "Infidel" meetings in Toronto. At last they call us "infidels." We believe and teach the Bible. Advent preachers have been presenting the word, and the light is shining more and more at every meeting and every day.——————Br. A. M. Gladding, Monroe, Wis. Some of the people in this region are beginning to believe that Bible truth alone will do for a foundation in the judgment, which so many believe to be near. God help us all to arouse to a more engagedness in his cause; and may the careless be aroused, and find no rest until they find it in a hope in the Redeemer. I try to talk with my neighbors about our hope while visiting and calling among them, and Br. Adrian has held some good meetings in this vicinity. Sr. Sarah A. Simms, Manchester: Advent doctrine was altogether new to me until within the last two years. Through the kindness of a neighbor (with much reluctance on my part), I was persuaded to read your paper. Then, after hearing a few sermons from Br. Calkins and Sr. Prescott, I was led to read the Bible in a new light. I am now taking the paper for myself, and feel as though I cannot do without it. The Christian's hope (as set forth in its pages) is all the comfort I have in this world. Most of my family have fallen asleep. But the blessed hope of a glorious immortality in a future world cheers my heart and enables me to rejoice, even while passing through this vale of tears.——————Sarah J. Adamson, New Jersey: I often wish when I read the accounts of the happy meetings of the Advent people in different places, that I could have the privilege of once more mingling with them, and enjoy their fellowship. But I am deprived of that privilege, and as I cannot meet with them, it is a comfort to me to read from week to week their letters. As I cannot see their faces or hear their voices, I can read my paper every Sunday and think of you. I long for that glad, glorious day when we shall meet all those we love.——————J. H. Mills, Dallas Co., Iowa: I embraced the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked more than ten years ago, but did not make up my mind to be an Adventist in full until some five years ago. Since then I have lived isolated. I have circulated Advent publications, and preached every summer, more or less: this past summer once in two weeks regularly. Have been hoping every year to attend a conference and camp-meeting, but have not hitherto been able. I hope yet to mingle with those of like precious faith.——————Sr. A. Wynkoop, Mayfield, Mich.: I wish I could offer some inducement for you or any of the Advent ministry to come and preach to us. There are no Adventists, save myself and sister and her husband. Last fall I had anticipated much in hearing Br. Bower, when we learned from Br. Skinner that he was to be at Wexford. But owing to his ill-health did not come then. By his letter in The Times I see that he has been there, and I am disappointed. I have not heard an Advent sermon since I was at the camp-meeting at DeKalb, two years ago. My preaching is The Times and my Bible, my precious Bible. I am looking for Jesus, and long to see him. May I not be among those who will call on the rocks and mountains to fall on them.

Conference Minutes

Indiana.

The second Q. M. convened at Medora, Jackson Co., Nov. 23.

Br. D. R. Mansfield was on hand, and opened the meeting in gallant style, and preached the word with acceptance and in much assurance, and when the undersigned arrived, on Saturday, he found the church awake, and citizens generally inquiring, Are these things so? The meeting was continued, Elds. Mansfield and Cass preaching alternately until Saturday night, at which time one lady gave her heart to the Lord and her name to the church, and the meeting closed at full tide.

So deeply was the church and community interested that Br. Mansfield was solicited to return at an early day, and hold a meeting of days, which he consented to do, and appointed Dec. 22, as the time. All are requested to take due and timely notice.

Medora is the place of residence of our aged fried, Br. West Lee Wright, whose poetic genius is known to fame. He eats poetically, sleeps poetically, talks, thinks, and sings poetically. He rhymes any subject. Here are his sons, James P., David, and several others. David preaches for the church. James practices law. Others are in business.

The country is rich, people intelligent, willing to investigate and accept the truth.

All things considered, I count the meeting a success, and when our dear Lord returns I am confident he will find a people here ready to say, "This is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us. This is our Lord, and we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

We missed familiar faces from other points. But I suppose we cannot all meet at all times in this changeful earth, ardently as we may desire so to do. May we all meet in the kingdom.

EASTERN DISTRICT, Q. M.

Held at Lapeer, beginning Nov. 2?. Members present: Elds. A. D. Mackie, Dr. F. Drummond, R. Crandell, E. H. Durand, A. M. B. Graham, and J. M. Snook. Brn. W. C. Hicks, J. Mars[illegible], Beals, Anderson, Wood, Talmage, Macomber, Ball, Sharrard, Br. Deming, of Christian church, and others.

The old Business Committee was continued. One was added to the Devotional Committee.

Br. Talmage was received as delegate from the church at Almer.

Churches at Elk, Brockway Center, Berlin, Columbus, Dearborn, Mt. Clemens, Can, Campbell's Corners were represented by delegate or preacher, and church at Speaker by letter.

In the reports of the brethren, most regreted that they had not been able to labor as much as they would have liked.

The Committee reported in favor of ordaining Br. W. C. Hicks, which was done on Sunday by Brn. Drummond, Mackie, and Snook.

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Michigan Conference that they recommend to the National Conference the propriety of suggesting some course of reading for our young ministers.

We also recommend that this Quarterly District canvass the propriety of procuring a new top for "Antioch" tent; and act upon it at the next Q. M. The owner of the tent as it is proposes to give it to the Conference if they will re-top it.

The brethren in Lapeer have a very nice chapel, 24x48, 14 ft. post, built in four weeks, and cost about $500. It was dedicated to the Lord and his service on Sunday morning, Eld. Mackie preaching the sermon.

Br. Deming, of the Christian Conference, was with us during the meeting, and preached the word to us on the nature of man.

Brn. Mackie and Durand remained with the church to continue the meeting.

Adjourned after agreeing to meet at Lapeer again at the next Q. M.

J. M. Snook, Sec'y.

Southern Illinois.

Proceedings of a preliminary meeting for the purpose of forming an Advent Christian Conference of Southern Illinois, held near Mount Joy, Johnson Co. Ill. Nov. 18, 1871.

Called to order by Eld. J. V. Himes, Nov. 18. Eld. J. S. Lawver was elected President.

We then proceeded to consider the proposition to unite with the Advent Christian Conference of Central Illinois. After mature deliberation and discussion it was decided that it was not expedient to do so, that the wants of the cause required the formation of an independent organization.

On motion the Chairman appointed a committee which made the following nominations for permanent officers.

For President, Eld. J. S. Lawver, Secretary, Eld. T. H. Thomassen, Treasurer, G. J. Calhoun.

Committee on Constitution: J. S. Lawver, F. A. Childs, Thos. G. Calhoun.

Committee on Camp Meeting: J. S. Lawver, F. A. Childs, John McCoy.

On motion the above nominations were confirmed; after which impressive and timely remarks were made showing it to be the duty of every member to work with a zeal to prepare a people for the blessed Master, to preach, distribute tracts, and a holy conversation and godly walk.

There being no further business before the meeting, adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

T. H. Thomassen, Sec'y.

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canada) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid, on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity. We have incurred considerable expense to bring his work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one-quarter will be made by the dozen; one-third for twenty five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We propose to issue about the first of January a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent-Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 10 or 15c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 24½ down to 11¼. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh; it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

USUAL PRICE $160.00;

but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be

SOLD FOR ONE HUNDRED & TWENTY DOLLARS!

BUCHANAN, ... MICHIGAN

The Year-Day Theory: Is It Correct?

That God has given us numerical prophecies all are agreed. They are designed for our instruction and improvment we ought to admit, else, it seems to us, we charge infinite wisdom with folly. That very much depends, in our investigations, upon a right answer to the question [illegible] the head of this article all must [illegible] at a glance. If, in symbolic prophecy, it is correct to reckon "each day f[illegible] a year," then it is proved that either the prophetic periods have nearly run their course, or we are many centuries from their termination. If, on the other hand, the year-day theory is incorrect the prophetic periods may not yet have commenced, and the past has been wholly misunderstood.

We have examined the argument brought against the "year-day" theory, but have failed to see their force, while we must regard the evidence in its favor as amounting to a demonstration.

1. A "day for a year" is a divinely established principle. Num. 14: 34, "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquites, even forty years." Ezk. 4: 5, 6, "For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquities, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year." Notwithstanding the evidence which these passages furnish in support of the "year-day theory," it is sometimes urged that as God has expressly stated in these passages that a day represents a year, therefore, in other places where no such explanation is given, a day does not mean a year. But, we ask, is this sound reasoning? If so, it amounts to this, that a term used symbolically is always explained. If this is disproved it deprives the objection of all its force. The book of Revelation is confessedly a book of symbols. Now suppose we were confined to that book for an explanation of its symbols, how much encourgement would there be to its study? We read of a "dragon," of "beasts," "women," "earthquakes," "seals," "trumpets," "vials," etc. Does this book furnish an explanation of all the symbols? No. Why? Because their explanation may be found in the previous writings of the inspired penman. We go to Daniel for an understanding of symbolic "beasts" and "horns," and to other books for that of the remainder. A principle, once established by an author, does not need continual repetition, but becomes a rule to be applied throughout his work except when good evidences of an exception exists.

2. The appropriateness of symbolizing years by days may be perceived, because they are analogous periods of time, a single revolution of the earth in a day being taken as the representation of the annual revolution of the same. On a principle much the same our geographers construct our maps; making an inch or part of an inch represent miles, or hundreds of miles.

This analogy between "days" and "years" is also seen in the fact that the same Hebrew word is rendered both ways. The Hebrew word for day is yom; plural, yomeem. Gesenius says: "Sometimes yomeem marks a definite space of time, viz., a year; . . . as in English several words signifying time, weight, measure, are likewise used to denote certain specific times, weights, measures." Aaron Pick says: "The Hebrew word for year is shonoh, which, as well as the plural, is generally used to express an incomplete year. . . . Whenever yomeem is used for year or years, it expresses a full year or years; as Gen. 41: 1; 1 Sam. 21: 7."

Here the fact is recognized that even separated from prophecy, under certain circumstances, the same Hebrew word which is translated days, sometimes is correctly rendered years. We will give a few illustrations. In Lev. 25: 29 the Hebrew is "a year of days," for which we have "a full year." In Num. 9: 22 "days" is rendered "a year." In Jud. 21: 19 the words "from days to days" is rendered "yearly." In 1 Sam. 1: 3, "the sacrifice." These instances might be multiplied but they are sufficient. "Day" and "year" in the Bible sustain the same relation to each other that they do in nature—one is miniature of the other.

The opposers of the year-day theory," in order if possible to escape the crushing evidence against them, tell us that these "weeks" are not ordinary ones but "hebdomads," or periods of seven, and may apply to hours, days, months or years, the event marked as their terminal point alone determining which is referred to, and that in this case the event has proved them to be hebdomads of years. But supposing the word employed is an unqualified hebdomad, still it is conceded that "weeks" is "seven days." Hebdomad is from the Greek hebdomas (seven) which is used by the septuagint to translate into the Greek the Hebrew word shevuoth, translated weeks in our English version. Webster defines hebdomad: "A week; a period of seven days." He defines hebdomadal: "weekly; consisting of seven days, or occurring every seven days." We learn from this, therefore, that the weeks of Daniel are hebdomad of days and the events have proved that they were year-days. Adam Clarke says on Dan. 9: 24: "The Jews had sabbatic years (Lev. 25: 8) by which their years were divided into weeks of years, as in the important prophecy, each week containing seven years. The seventy weeks, therefore, here spoken of, amounts to four hundred and ninety years."

The idea of weeks of years is older than Daniel's prophecy. Gen. 29: 28, "Fulfill her week, and we will give thee this also for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years. And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to his wife also."

This method of expression was common also among the later Jews and Greeks. Did one say to another, "in three weeks will be the jubilee," he would be understood as saying, that that feast was twenty-one years distant. Thus a certain Greek wrote to his friend, "On this day I am just eleven weeks old." Now this was simply saying in other words, that, on that day, he completed his seventy-seventh year. No confusion followed this mode of speech. No difficulty occurred in understanding it.

4. The connection of the prophetic periods with symbols evidences the "year-day theory." There is a "fitness of things" in all the divine arrangements. "Beasts," "heads," "horns," etc., in Daniel are confessedly symbols. Why then should not the periods connected with them be symbolic? We make in the Revelation, "the temple," "the city of Babylon," "the holy city," "the altar," "the Gentiles," "the witnesses," "the sackcloth," "the woman," "the dragon," "the beast," "the Euphrates," "the locusts," etc., to be symbols. Now if we depart from this, and make the "hour," "days," "months," an exception, we should feel the necessity of giving some strong and satisfactory reason for so doing, and this we are not able to do.

The work contemplated in the prophecies, with which periods are connected, prove the "year-day theory" correct.

The 2300 days of Dan. 8: 13, 14, consist of two parts, one of the "daily sacrifice," and the other "the transgression of desolation." The context, as well as the rest of Daniel's prophecy, shows that the work of "desolation" is the Roman power. But if these days are to be applied literally, they will not reach to the rise of that power, much less to its desolation. And if these days are to be fulfilled as literal days in the future, it follows that all the "desolation" which the church has suffered from the Roman power during the centuries past is overlooked. Is there a desolation yet to come upon the church of a comparatively few days in duration which is so great as to have completely eclipsed from the prophet's eye the awful work of the past? Let him believe it who can.

The time of the little horn's persecuting work is given as a time, times, and the dividing of time. The period is explained in Rev. 11: 6, 14, to be 1260 days. But are these days literal? No. The desolating work lasted 1260 years. The Saracenic "locusts" were allotted "five months" in which to do their work. A month in Revelation is thirty days. Thus the forty-two months of chapter eleven are equivalent to the 1260 days of the same chapter. The work of the Saracens occupied 150 years. That of the Turkish hordes was to fill the space of "an hour, a day, a month and a year." It continued 391 years and fifteen days. The "beast like a leopard" was to "continue" or "make war forty-two months." This beast had "seven heads" that ruled as its representative in successive order. (See ch. 17.) Each one of these heads "continued" longer than forty-two literal months. The beast and its heads "continued" and "made war" forty-two months of years. Need we any farther proof than these facts afford?

The Roman power, in its various forms, is the great and interesting one of prophecy. God has given us beasts, heads, horns, etc., for its symbolization, and periods to limit its duration, and that theory which uproots these periods from their proper place and carries them off in the future is calculated to destroy faith in the correctness of our position, and thus throw us off our guard and watch. The Roman power is crumbling to its fall. This is unmistakably true! Christ must soon come for its utter destruction. Therefore, the periods which limit its duration must soon end, and Daniel, with all the people of God, stand in their "lot at the end of the days." Let us walk in the "old paths."—W. N. Pile, Herald of Life.

Appropriateness.

Nothing can be more appropriate than appropriateness itself, by which is meant the faculty of saying and doing the right thing in the right way and at the right time. A few words on this subject in relation to preaching may not be considered inopportune. A sermon may be well arranged, learned, logical and even eloquent, and yet lack appropriateness, without which it is not "meat in due season."

Preachers should give heed to Paul's admonition to Timothy, and study to shew themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. A sermon may lack appropriateness for various reasons. It may be too long, or too short; too refined in expression for some audiences, and too coarse for others; its delivery may be too rapid, or too slow; too tame, or too energetic. The preacher may speak too loud, or too low; he may gesture too much, or too little.

It is not my purpose, however, at this time to offer any suggestions as to the composition or delivery of sermons. These are very important subjects, but my present object is to call attention to inappropriateness that arises from other and extrinsic causes. Many sermons lose their proper effect from being inopportunely delivered. All must admit that a sermon that would be appropriate at one time might be very inappropriate at another time. What would be thought of a church choir that should sing at a Thanksgiving or Christmas service:

"Hark! from the tomb a doleful sound?"

Not less inappropriate would be a sermon on the "Melchisedek Priesthood," or "Rationalism," or "The Catholic Question," delivered during a revival, or at a time when the devotional element of a continued meeting was steadily rising. No surer way of killing a good and growing interest is known than to introduce a topic entirely discordant to the tone and temper of the meeting.

It is a fact much to be regretted that there should be preachers anywhere willing and anxious to press merely speculative questions to the exclusion of subjects of vital importance. Very much depends on choosing an appropriate subject. The preacher, in making his choice, should take into consideration the time, the place, and the occasion. If called upon during a continued meeting to preach, he would generally do well to choose a subject in harmony with the prevailing tone of the assembly. This course would make for peace and unity of sentiment without which the highest success can never be reached. They who preach self-denial to others should practice what they preach. A very useful exercise of this virtue would be for the preacher to refrain from preaching his favorite sermon whenever such sermon would be inappropriate to the occasion. Small sermons that are appropriate do more good than great ones that are inappropriate. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." "A word spoken in due season how good is it!" J. H. WHITMORE.

The Year-Day Theory: Is It Correct?

That God has given us numerical prophecies all are agreed. They are designed for our instruction and improvment we ought to admit, else, it seems to us, we charge infinite wisdom with folly. That very much depends, in our investigations, upon a right answer to the question at the head of this article all must see at a glance. If, in symbolic prophecy, it is correct to reckon "each day for a year," then it is proved that either the prophetic periods have nearly run their course, or we are many centuries from their termination. If, on the other hand, the year-day theory is incorrect the prophetic periods may not yet have commenced, and the past has been wholly misunderstood.

We have examined the argument brought against the "year-day" theory, but have failed to see their force, while we must regard the evidence in its favor as amounting to a demonstration.

"Trust."

"Sorrow may be for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." —Bible.

Traveller on life's journey dreary
Sorrowful, afflicted, weary,
Naught in all the world to cheer thee,
Kiss the rod.

O'er life's transient night of sorrow,
There shall break the glad to-morrow,
Trust in God.

Trust in his almighty power
In thy saddest, darkest, hour,
When the clouds the blackest lower,
Look above.

See the bow of promise o'er thee,
Glowing with the glad sweet story,
God is love.

He thy keeper, never sleeping,
But around thee ever keeping
Watchful care, then cease thy weeping,
Never fear.

He thy footsteps still attending
Thy defenceless head defending,
God is near.

We have just closed a protracted effort in this city with good success, though not as great as we could have desired. Eld. Reed and wife assisted us, and it seemed like old times to labor together as in former years. They are true yoke-fellows in the gospel; and we anticipate great pleasure in laboring in the field while we tarry on this coast.

The brethren have hired a hall, formerly used for dances, etc., and connected with it was a saloon, and Bowling Alley. The good citizens of the town are glad of its conversion to meeting purposes, save some envious and jealous sectarians; and in this humble place the Advent truths and Adventists find a refuge and a platform from which the faith is proclaimed. It is a free place where no compromise is to be made, or yokes imposed, hindering the free proclamation of the word of God. The little church were greatly edified and strengthened by the prophetical, doctrinal, and practical discourses, and religious meetings held during the fortnight of the continuance of the effort; and some sinners were converted to the truth and to God, while others were enlightend, and the good seed of the kingdom sown in their hearts yet to spring up, from which a future harvest will be gathered.

The first Sundy of our meeting Nov. 19, I baptized one candidate, in the Bay, while a large congregation stood upon the shore as witnesses of the ordinance. It was an occasion of great interest. Yesterday (Sunday the 26th) about a dozen more candidates were to have been baptised, but a severe storm of wind and rain prevented, which prevailed all day making the Bay to boisterous to attempt the administration. The ordinance is postponed until next Lord's day when Eld. Reed will attend to it.

Our meetings were well attended most of the time. A rain set in during the first part of our effort which hindered for two days much of a gathering. The streets are impassible for pedestrians after a rain of a few hours, except those who are prepared to carry with them large quantities of mud, with rubbers tied upon the feet, or otherwise fitted to encounter the inconvenience of travel. "Adobe" is the name given to this mud, and it is descriptive of the worst kind of mud I ever saw! We also closed our meetings under a driving storm of wind and rain which began early Sunday morning, accompanied with thunder and lightning, which is seldom experienced here. The thunder in this region is usually in the bowels of the earth! but this we have not had as yet since we came. The grading of the streets, and the lack of side-walks, which are now in process of building are detrimental to the comfort of foot-travelers in time of rain, so that our last meeting, when we anticipated a larger congregation than ever and a most happy season at the water side, was greatly broken in upon.

In one view our meeting appeared a defect, but in another a victory. It has been a hard fought battle against the powers of darkness, unbelief, and sectarian bigotry; but thank God some souls have been plucked from the burning. The seed is also sown for a future harvest I have no doubt.

Eld. Grant is expected at Vallejo, Dec. 30, when another effort will be put forth to save men. Some interest is awakened in the community to know how the clergymen of Vallejo will meet Eld. Grant, who were apparently so cordial in co-operation at his first coming. They have preached against the doctrine of the Advent since; call it "All bosh!" or something else as bad; and slander him by affirming that "he does not believe in the Divinity of Christ." The Baptist minister is an exception, who favored us with his presence occasionally in our meetings.

HINDRANCES

There are formidable barriers raised against the truth on this coast since Eld. Grant was hear. The churches are organizing against the spread of the truth, and doctrine which they are pleased to call "heresy." And the clergy have given out that they mean to "put down this Jack-Ass Doctrine." They may for a while apparently triumph, as did the Jewish Church at the first advent of the Messiah, but the fate of that church and nation is sure to come upon them and those they influence, namely, "be broken to shivers," and "wither" forever! Adventists are being excluded from the synagogue because of their faith; while drunkards and other sinners are allowed church fellowship! Religion is at a low ebb, and vital piety almost a thing unknown, while a religious form under great extravagance prevails. Alas! for Christianity!

The Roman Catholics are strong, and formidable, and their priests forbid the attendance of their people upon our meetings. On the Catholic Church at Vallejo, there is in front, cut in marble, the following inscription "If any man hear not the church, let him be a heathen and publican."

Infidelity is organized, defiant, and flushed with success, having its center at San Francisco. Atheists, Deists, Spiritists, Apostates who are Sadducees, and Skeptics of all grades, meet in one general conclave to hunt down Christ and the Bible. For three weeks or more "the Atonement" was up for three wise ones to discuss, and their conclusion may not be hard to guess. Now "the Bible" is sharing the same fate. Speakers from different parts of the States ventilate their opinions on the platform of Dashaway Hall. But these mortal efforts will prove as abortive as similar ones of this class in the past history of our world, and the doctrine" without shedding of blood there is no remission;" which has survived six thousand years of hostile opposition beginning with the martyred Abel, will outlive these puny efforts; and the Bible will continue to be the Book par excellence above all their proud and furious attacks, until these men die covered with confusion as did their predecessors, or the Lord appear to consign them in judgment to the ignominy of oblivion! I should think that this class of men would be discouraged when they read the history of the past and see both Christ and the Bible surviving, as the rocks amid ocean's surging and dashing billows, all efforts to destroy them. I want Christian men everywhere who love Jesus and the Bible, to unite in prayer that God will break into the ranks of these enemies of the truth, and of themselves, and confound their heaven-daring efforts, and bring some of them, at least, to give glory to him, and make them the trophies of his grace.

ENCOURAGEMENTS.

The Advent faith is beginning to be examined, studied, and embraced by many on this coast, and a people will be gathered out of the multitude who will look for, and welcome our Lord at his coming.

There is no locality when the Advent truths can be more widely diffused among different nationalities than here. There are representatives of nearly all tribes and nations of men on this coast. The gospel light, on the coming kingdom, shining brightly here will light up both hemispheres before its setting; and the "isles of the sea" will hear of the coming of the glorified King! There must be an unflinching effort on this whole coast to illuminate the people who now sit in the darkness and shadow of death. Men of God must come here from the East filled with faith and the Holy spirit to do this work, a God must raise up laborers in the very midst of this people to herald the advent of our triumphant Lord. This land should be flooded with Advent tracts and publications in different languages. Brethren come over and help us. The Lord is at hand!

Crusoe and Friday.

As the story goes, there was one Robinson Crusoe who was wrecked on a lonely island. And as he tells us he made many ineffectual attempts to escape, also he succeeded in capturing a parrot and a few goats which he utilized; and still later he caught a savage heathen that had fled from some one of the tribes that came to his lonely shores to celebrate a great victory or to put to death a victim or victims they had captured in their wars.

Now let us suppose that Robinson Crusoe had never seen or heard tell of the Bible, or word of God, and we are quite sure his man that he caught, named Friday, never had. Suppose, for argument's sake, that God had descended, as he did to Moses and the children of Israel, and handed the Scriptures to Robinson. He calls his man Friday, opens the book, and begins to read. He reads along until he comes to Gen. 1: 27, and finds that God created man in his own image, and then how he made him out of the dust of the ground, and how God placed man in the beautiful garden of Eden, and how man was allowed the freedom of the garden with the exception of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. "Thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." And he continues reading until he comes to where the serpent tells the help-mate that God had given to Adam (Gen. 3: 4), "Ye shall not surely die." Crusoe little thinks as he and his man Friday sit there drinking in the pure and unperverted word of God that his friends at home and orthoxdy at large are teaching and believing the same falsehood, viz. that man is immortal, and can never die; and as regards duration of being, man is equal with God!

He reads that Eve partook of the forbidden fruit and gave to the man, and how God drove them out of the garden (Gen. 3: 24). "So he drove out the man, and placed at the East of the garden of Eden cherubim and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever." Also, that Adam died, notwithstanding the assertion of the serpent to the contrary (Gen. 5: 5): "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died."

Crusoe loves to read the book Divine. His heart is being warmed, and the man Friday looks on with wonder and is amazed when he is told of the great God of the universe. The being that Friday worshipped sinks away, and is little thought of. He reads along until he comes to Ps. 146: 4, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to the earth: in that very day his thoughts perish." He now turns to the New Testament. He reads of the goodness of God and how he gave his own Son to die for the sins of the world. And that through his Son we may have eternal life. Although man dies, he reads that God will "raise him up at the last day." And if he has kept the commandments as laid down in the book, he will be raised immortal, to die no more. He is melted to tears. Oh, how he longs to tell the glad tidings to his friends far, far away! His heart is burning with the love of God. He reads that "the wages sin is deat [illegible] om. 6: 23). But the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. And he continues to read. He sees the two great promises God has made,—life and immortality to his followers on the one hand, and everlasting death and destruction on the other.

Crusoe believes it—he does not dispute it, believing it to be the word of God. Mind, he has no orthodox commentaries to refer to. So he takes the plain truth. He there does not need a D. D. that has studied for years to extort and twist and try the Elasticity of the Bible to its utmost; but Crusoe reads the two simple words life and death—not life and misery!

But look! a vessel is in sight. He signals the ship. They take him on. He is filled with joy. He is going once more to his dear friends. But the dearest thought in his mind is his book that was given to him in such a miraculous manner; the book that has comforted him and made him happy in the love of God in so many lonely hours. He arrives home. His friends and neighbors gather in, and after asking many questions and quiet is restored, Crusoe with joyous and sparkling eyes brings out the book; tells how it was delivered to him, and how happy it has made him. He begins to read the precious promises that are made to those who obey God's word. He reads from Rom. 6: 23; John 10: 28; John 3: 16; 2 Pet. 2: 12: 2 Thes. 1: 9; Gal. 3: 5; John 4: 14; 5: 9–12; 28: 24; 6: 40; Eccl. 3: 19–21; 1 Cor. 15: 46–56; Gen. 2: 7–17; 3: 4; 3: 22–24; 5: 5; Job. 4: 17–20; Is. 2: 22; Gen. 7: 21–23.

When he has finished reading his friends ask him if he believes that. He is struck with surprise to think that any should doubt such plain language. They tell him that man, saint or sinner, is already immortal, independent of the gift of God; that man is to suffer to all eternity in unutterable misery and torment in hell-fire: that man never dies; that before the body is cold, if good, he is in the presence of God; and if he died in his sins, he has gone to hell to burn forever and ever. They tell him that there is none that believe the doctrine that he has received, with the exception of a handfull of Adventists; and God does not say what he means, or mean what he says! Imagine if you can the despair and discomfiiure depicted on the poor man's countenance if he can be made to believe them. His hopes have fled, he is bewildered. He says, is this the way God deals with men? He throws down his book in disgust. The Bible that in his loneliness made him so happy, appears to him now as an idle tale. You have a confirmed infidel.

C. S. Branch.

A Dialogue.

Adventist. Good morning, Br. M.; happy to find you enjoying health this morning.

Methodist. Thank you sir; glad to meet you, wishing to have some conversation with you. I understand that you are a "Millerite."

A. What makes you think I am a Millerite?

M. Because I saw you at the camp-meeting the other day.

A. It seems, Br. M., that you were there too, and if being there makes me a Millerite, does it not make you one too?

M. Well, but I did not take any part as you did in the prayer meeting and love feast as it was called.

A. As you profess to be a Christian, why did you not take a part with them?

M. Because I think their doctrines are infidel, and the Bible tells me not to take any part with infidels and unbelievers.

A. If you consider the Second Adventists infidels, why did you go to their meeting?

M. Oh! having heard them called infidels by my Methodist friends, I thought I would go once and hear for myself; and am sorry to say that I think the reports true.

A. Did you hear any infidel or unscriptural doctrines advanced there?

M. I think I did.

A. Did they deny the Bible?

M. Not exactly all of it, but then the main truths of the Bible were twisted to harmonize with their unpopular ideas.

A. What Scripture did they deny or twist, to maintain their "unpopular theology?"

M. They denied the immortality of the soul, the endless torments of the wicked, and the conscious state of the righteous and wicked betweeen death and the resurrection; doctrines plainly taught in the Bible—yes, so plain "that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein."

A. You say those doctrines are plainly taught in the Bible; will you please to refer me to chapter and verse?

M. Perhaps not now, but I am sure they can be found in the Scriptures of truth, for I have heard our ministers, the best learned and greatest preachers, often speak in their sermons of the "immortal" and "never-dying soul," "endless torment," and "the death that never dies." If such doctrines and texts were not in the Bible, do you think they would not have known it?

A. Before we talk any further, we will adjourn, giving you time to search for such passages as "immortal soul," "never-dying soul," "death that never dies," "endless misery," or "endless hell torments." If you find them, you shall receive from me one hundred dollars cash in hand, at the next interview.

M. All right Br. A. I will search my Bible faithfully and prayerfully, feeling sure that I shall not only come off victorious, but gain one hundred dollars. Adieu, till we meet again to resume this interesting subject.

SECOND INTERVIEW.

A. Good evening, Br. M.; have come to receive the promised hundred dollars I suppose?

M. Well, Br. A., I must confess to you that I have not won it. I searched the Bible, using the best Concordance there is out; and after searching almost night and day for several days, I must frankly confess to you that those words and expressions are not in the Bible.

A. Br. M., what think you now? Who, Sir, are infidels; those who take the Bible as it reads, or those who add to it words "self-manufactured?"

M. Br. A., I do freely acknowledge that I was blinded by tradition, as many of my brethren preachers are to-day.

A. Are you now prepared to admit the Bible truths that you heard at the before-mentioned Second Advent camp-meeting?

M. I am. After prayerfully searching the Scriptures, I not only found those passages missing but I found the heart-cheering truth that God is love; the "love worketh no ill;" that that "God is unchangeably good to all;" that "his tender mercies are over all his works;" that he will not keep "his anger forever," because he delighteth in mercy;" hence endless torments cannot be true. If such doctrines had been true, the Bible would have been as full of them as many of our Methodist and Orthodox sermons have been.

A. True, Br. M. Now as you find nothing, or no positive proof of endless torment, etc., what is your present conviction concerning Bible truth?

M. It is that all men are mortal and must "seek for....immortality and eternal life," or be forever destroyed "root and branch" in "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." I learn by the Bible that "the soul that sinneth it shall die; that the "wages of sin is death"—not eternal existence; for "all the wicked" God says "he will destroy" with "everlasting destruction." I read that "the dead know not anything"; they "return to dust"; "in that very day their thoughts perish." I now believe the Bible says just what it means, and always means what it says.

A. Have you ever read any of our books or tracts upon these subjects?

M. Never till since our first interview, and they have enlightened my mind and cheered my heart. And my Bible now harmonizes with itself and the character of Christ. It is, as it were, a new book to me.

A. Bro. M., this is the language of every one who has left the heathen tradition of "immortal-soulism" and that "thou shalt not surely die," and have come over to the plain and literal teachings of the Bible. If men go to heaven or hell as soon as they die, and are then all judged and rewarded according to their works, it excludes the necessity of a geneaal judgment, and especially of a resurrection, on which is founded the hope of every true believer.

M. So, Bro. A., it now appears to me; and I shall ever be thankful to God for this blessed interview, which has resulted in my conviction of Bible truth. To God be all the glory. Hallelujah!

A Short Criticism.

"For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." —Mat 16. 25, 2

Here in this verse we find that life is the thing to lose, or save, or find, while in the next, without any change of subject, the soul is the thing to lose, or exchange. For what is man profited if he gainh the whole world and lose his own soul, or what will a man give in exchange for his soul." Now why this change of word without any change of subject? if life is the right word in the first case why was soul substituted in the second? But if soul is the right word, why not have used it in both cases? Let us read it that way, and see how it will sound, "For, whosoever will save his soul shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his soul for my sake shall find it. Ah I see! There was a little bier, a little theory at stake. The soul is immortal, it won't do to have it read "If a man would save his soul he shall lose it," not that a man in order to be saved must lose his soul for Christ's sake. That would be absurd. Now let it be noticed, man in this verse is distinct from soul. Soul is had in possession by the man, can be lost and found. Query, "Can one lose a thing, say a watch, and have it in possession at the same time? Every one will answer: No. Then there is a time when a man has no soul, if soul is the right word to use in this text.

Again, if, as some say the soul is the man proper, who is the man that loses his soul? But when we use the word life, all troudle is at an end, all comes naturally and harmonious. "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." To illustrate, take the martyrs; they lost their lives for his sake, and now have no life, they are dead, but they are under this promise—"shall find it." "They dead men shall live." "They that have done good to the resurrection of life." etc. The translators in Lk. 9: 25, have done more justice to this text, for in place of the word soul they put the word himself! "For what is a man advantaged' if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be castaway." Life is everything to a man. Without it he is dead; and the dead know nothing "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, they are brought low and he perceiveth it not of them."

But when he lives again [illegible] a living soul once more, and with the "life more abundantly" their estate will be good.

O. D [illegible]

Evening Talks with my Neighbors.

Good evening, Mr. L.—I [illegible] upon you this evening, to [illegible] talk upon the evidences [illegible]tianity.

L. Very well. By your permission we will continue our outside testimony. Hume, the great infidel historian, gave skeptics the key as he thought—"that no testimony can prove a miracle,"—This, skeptics think, is the key that forever closes the Bible. He says, also, that a miracle is a violation of the law of nature, "for the laws of nature are firm and unalterable; therefore a miracle is out of the question."

D. This seems to be against you; is it not?

L. Oh, no! I assert that we believe the testimony before we believe the fact.

D. Please explain.

L. Well. How could our children learn how to avoid poison, and learn what is good for food? Hume says that a miracle is also against our experience. Let us see. The resurrection of Lazarus is not contrary to my experience, any more than a volcano is. I have never experienced it—it is beyond my experience. So might a native of the Torrid Zone say to me should I go there and tell him that the water gets so hard in my own country that men and horses can walk on it, that it was against his experience; "I have never seen it—therefore I will not believe it."

D. Go on. I like your "Advent" reasoning style.

L. You recollect, Doctor, that there was a time when the laws of magnetism were against man's experience. And had one then arisen from the dead and told us that magnetism did suspend the law of gravitation in many instances, and that a person could hold up a large magnet and that a piece of iron would fly up to it from the earth, it would not have been believed.

D. True there was a time when this seemed contrary to the laws of nature, according to our experience. But not so now.

L. Was the making and the wheeling into existence this planet of ours (the earth) done by the laws of nature?

D. Oh! I see now where Hume erred, in saying that a miracle was a violation of the laws of nature.

L. How?

D. It was only a deviation.

L. Correct, correct; a deviation, not a violation; for are not you a miracle? or did you come by chance? If by chance, why have arms, legs, eyes, nose, ears, etc., etc.?

D. That calls to my mind a story of a little girl who asked her Father—"Papa, why are the little chickens (just out of the shell) all covered with little fine hairy feathers?" "Oh," says her Father, "I guess they come by chance!" "But," says the little girl, "they are all alike!" However, had I lived in the second century or so near to the time of miracles, then I might be more sure of it.

L. Are your County Records not true because they were made before you were born?

D. Certainly not.

L. Can you dispute the record that was made nearly one hundred years ago, July 4, 1776, about our independence, any more than you could those made 1800 years ago.

D. I cannot.

L. Every body believes the testimony that Julius Cæsar invaded England, and Hannibal, Italy. The man of seventy is the same that he was at twenty years of age, although the particles of his body may have changed many times. Can he not think back and tell what transpired when he was twenty years old?

D. True. I can think back for twenty years.

L. So the church of Christ. This Bible is the same record made 1,800 years ago. Though the librarians die they hand this record down to us from generation to generation, the record itself does not change. They are like our family Bibles, handed down to us from our great grandfathers: the same reading that they were then one or two or more hundreds of years ago. Has there ever been a record like the Bible record; so carefully guarded and taken care of in all the world? Look at the Tischendorf manuscripts: how jealously they were watched by the monks of Sinai.

D. What was the use of miracles?

L. I will illustrate.—Suppose that a patriarch was to appear at my house attired in the garb of a prophet or ancient patriarch, and say to me, I want your farm to build thereon a temple, and I am commissioned to ask you to vacate it for this purpose, etc. What would you do?

D. Why I would ask him for some signs of authority?

L. Well, suppose he was to point his staff towards the sun, and say, "Sun stand thou still for the space of twelve hours," and you saw by your clock and by your labor that the sun did stand still: would you feel like giving up your farm?

D. Surely, surely!

L. So in the days of Christ the church in its infancy needed supernatural aid. So in the beginning of creation it needed supernatural power to produce the oak trees. Now they come by heaven's established laws.

D. Mr. L. my faith is growing, in this Christ, who, you say, is soon coming personally. I desire to know more of him. Please call again. Good evening.

J. S. LAWYER.

Not Quite Universal, but General, Salvation.

The new doctrine now being promulgated, that all men will finally be saved, except a few who sin against the Holy Spirit, is to say the least of it a very near approach to Universalism. The authors and inventors of the extraordinary theory of the gospel, use Universalist texts and undertake to prove it by Universalist logic. They may all therefore be considered as belonging essentially to the same theological school. One writer says:

> "We have no idea that any large portion of those who live in what is called 'Christendom' have ever heard the gospel as it came from Christ and his apostles. They have heard a corrupted message by professed teachers of the gospel; and multitudes of them for centuries, have had no means of determining what the true gospel is; and been really in a great darkness, as the darkest pagans now are or ever were. All such will yet hear the gospel in its purity, sometime and somehow."

If all this be true, then what is the use of preaching to the multitude a corrupted gospel? Better let them alone until the next age when they will have infallible teachers. Better vacate all the meeting houses and sell them for secular purposes; stop the publication of all religious papers and tracts, and let every man shift for himself. According to the view, the people in Christendom would be just as well off without preachers as with them.

It also follows from these premises that the Bible is worthless to the masses in Christendom, without infallible expounders of its contents. Putting it in every man's hands, thereby giving him the gospel in its purity as it came from Christ and his apostles, and the opportunity to study for himself, is not sufficient to enlighten his understanding, without a Paul or Peter to explain it to him!!

Translating the Bible into two hundred languages and dialects, and sending it by ship-loads to every part of the habitable globe, that all nations may read in their own vernacular, the story of the cross, and learn the conditions of salvation, has been a waste of money and labor. Unless some divinely inspired teacher goes with the gospel to every individual and explains it to him, "with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven," it would, according to the new theory, be unjust in God to let him die eternally for not believing and obeying it! The logical conclusion of the whole matter is, that the multitudes in Christendom cannot, and never could, with the Bible in their houses, "determine what the true gospel is." !!!

Reader, are you prepared to admit this dangerous and demoralizing conclusion? Are you willing to sheathe the sword of the Spirit—acknowledge that no man teaches the gospel in its purity, stop the publication of the Bible, and cease all efforts for the conversion of sinners? We may as well do this, if we are only converting people to "a corrupted message!"

N. FIELD.

Our Cause.

Our cause is the "Lord's cause," because we verily believe that he has raised up and appointed us specifically to herald the "present truth"—the 'gospel of the everlasting kingdom' to this generation, who are soon to behold the judgment scenes, as portrayed in the Bible, his word, "which liveth and abideth forever." And while we go forth to this work, at his bidding, we cannot acquit ourselves as 'faithful' if we "shun to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear." In doing this it is requisite that "the whole armor be buckled on, for the time is when men have departed from the faith, giving heed to "seducing spirits" [so-called spiritual manifestations, or spiritualism] and doctrines of devils," [the natural immortality of man, etc]. With these there are delusions, monstrosities, and absurd philosophies, "science falsely so called," which "if it were possible would deceive the very elect."

All this, in taking our stand positively for God and the Bible, we have to confront, and contend against, however strong or popular they have, or may become. But, thank God, "he that endureth unto the end shall be saved."

Dear brethren and sisters, waiting and watching unto prayer for the glorious appearing of our blessed Lord, do not the evidences become stronger and stronger, that we really are in the very midst of the events of the last days, that has been so clearly portrayed in the prophetic word? And does not our faith and love grow stronger? And shall not our zeal as those to whom God has committed a special and most sacred message and work, become more and more evinced by activity and sacrifices? If we indeed believe what we claim and profess, it will be so. It must be so. To be otherwise is a reproach and libel.

Thank God. We feel that he is by his own good Spirit, and in his own good ways, leading many of his waiting ones to feel a deeper and more earnest sense of the importance of the time, and of the work he has committed to our hands. And although from the prophecy of the Bible itself, we cannot expect the multitudes to turn unto the Lord, and his truth, any more than they did at the preaching and warning of Noah, yet we have this consolation: "Fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And while probation yet lingers, may we not hope, to "comfort the feeble minded," "support the weak," being "patient towards all," and if possible "snatch some brands from the burning?" May the Lord help us.

While our hearts are drawn out in earnest love to God and solicitation for our fellows, let us inquire: What are the duties and privileges of us all?

1. To consecrate all to God and his cause; even "presenting our bodies a living sacrifice holy and acceptable unto him; for it is our reasonable service."

Brother, or sister, in the 'blessed hope,' have you "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." If so, thus far it is well. If you have not, remember that Christ has said, "If you love me, keep my commandments!" And when he went to John to be baptized [immersed] of him, although John protested that Christ had no need to be baptized, he met the objection declaring, "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And mark, the approval of the high and holy Father. "And having been immersed Jesus went up immediately from the water; and lo, the heavens were open to him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove and coming upon him. And lo! a voice out of heaven saying: This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Can you doubt for a moment the divine authority of this rite? Christ would have us obey and follow him.

But perhaps an equivocating theology has taught you that many 'forms' of this 'doctrine' may be instituted and practiced, and it is all right if your conscience is satisfied. But we protest in the name of the Lord against such perversions of the divine word. The Scriptures say not that anything will do or answer that satisfies your conscience, but it says "baptism [immersion] is the answer of a good conscience toward God." And why? Evidently, because he has divinely appointed it, declaring his good pleasure in his well beloved Son's observance of it. Brother or sister, "obey from the heart this form of doctrine," and receive the divine approval. "If ye love me keep my commandments!" Do all for Christ. Delay not. Do as the beloved Paul did. "Confer not with flesh and blood." "Why tarriest thou?" "Arise, be immersed." Don't wait for a "revival," or to have the minister urge the duty. Prepare your heart before God, and demand it at the hand of one whom you may choose. And the good Lord give you much grace, and a great blessing in obedience. Amen.

For Sabbatarians.

1. Prove that Saturday in the calendar for A. D. 1871, calculated to mean time for Boston, Pittsburg, or any other point in the United States, is the Sabbath-day commanded to be observed, and which was observed by the church under the law, B. C.

2. Prove that any man, anywhere now living on the globe, is keeping the fourth commandment as given in the Decalogue (Ex. 20: 8–11), and as interpreted in the law. (Ex. 35: 2, 3.) Give the place of his residence and his name.

3. Prove that the fourth commandment in the Decalogue is anywhere commanded to be kept in the reversed statutes of Jehovah, or New Testament, under which we are now living. (Mat. 7: 24–20; Acts 3: 22, 23; Heb. 1: 1, 2; 2: 1–4; Jas. 4: 12.)

Until the above is proved, the Law Teachers of the present day must be considered as having "the mark" of the class of whom Paul speaks: "Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm." (1 Tim. 1: 7.)

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 19, 1871.

ONE of the last places to economise—in your family p aper; almost any thing can be better spared.

Mr. Louis Napoleon is justly referred to in a late editorial in the N. Y. Tribune as "this gelatinous incapacity."

It was a saying of the good Archbishop Leighton: "It is better to be meekly in error than to be furiously orthodox."

A FINE Christmas or New Year's present. Send your neighbor, or friend, or your child away from home THE TIMES for a year.

G. VIBNOT P. H. V says the world is not getting worse. After such an assertion from a man with such a ponderous title we know of but one course to pursue: smother our convictions, and bow meekly to superior wisdom.

Is Solomon in heaven? is the subject of a column and a half article in an exchange The conclusion reached is, that he is in heaven. We only remark it is a curious thing that Solomon should ascend to heaven, and David be denied a passage there. (Acts 2: 34.)

THE Bible Banner for December has come to hand, and holds out special inducements for the coming year. We trust the Publisher may soon be in a condition to carry out the liberal plans he proposes for its circulation everywhere. Let it be planted in every town and village in the land, to attract attention to Bible truth.

IT is a great misfortune, say the Interior, fo, a man of some talent, a great deal of energy and a rapidly acquired popularity, to be afflicted with the "big-head" disease so severely as to make the "I" the thread on which he hangs all the sayings of his discourse. It is proposed to alter the old hymn,

"Blow your own trumpets, blow!"

ELD. Mathes understood Br. Green to propose a vote of thanks to him for his 'impartial and dignified' presiding at the Harrisonville debate. Inasmuch as Eld. M. gave notice on assuming the chair that he would decide no question of order, it is hard to see where the 'impartiality' would come in. What Br. Green really said was—'for his kindness in presiding over this discussion.' Its of no particular consequence, but we thought it well to make a note of the matter.

THE Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat devotes considerable space to a report of the late Advent Conference in that city in the usual not over clear style of newspaper reports of religious assemblies. That journal admits that "a spirit of candor and sincerity seemed to pervade both the preaching and the audience." Sermons by Br. Cogswell and Srs. Jennings and Stoddard are highly spoken of. The Democrat concludes that the 'Adventists have evidently gained a footing in the State, for good or for ill, not entirely unenviable; but they are said to be most numerous in New England. Their zeal for their peculiar cause, if it be not entirely according to knowledge, is terrible in earnestness—to use a strong adjective—and none but a stoic can but admire their ardor and venerate their vim in prosecuting their work.' On the whole the Conference must have been quite satisfactory in its results to both Br. Whitmore and his congregation.

DR. EWER of New York has obtained some notoriety by his proclamation of "Protestantism a failure"—a statement which like many falsehoods had a grain of truth in it. Of late he preached from Psalm commencing, "Mine eyes look upon thee."

Midnight darkness, he says, is brooding over the world at this present time. Men are sunk in spiritual ignorance and blindness, while society is rotten to its very center. On every side we look we see political and social corruption abounding in our States and cities, while untold murders of both body and soul are being daily committed in our midst. The friends of God and truth are few in number; but a minority of one on the side of truth is more than equal to the marshaled hosts in the ranks of error. Though the gathering clouds of midnight are hovering around we must not despair; for through the gloom faint traces can be perceived of the opening light.

—After telling so plain a truth something good might be expected of him: but what do we receive? What is the promised, or 'perceived' ray of light? Simply Ritualism! One of the weakest theological follies of the age!

A FRIEND sends us an "elegant extract" from the Morning Star, concerning Adventism. We presume there is no misrepresentation of Adventism or Adventists so gross or so mean that that journal would decline to publish it. We will just notice the most probable of the two items in the extract referred to:

We heard one of the Second Adventists try to explain the passage: 'For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.' He told us that all who had died were in their graves, soul, body and all; that the "Lord would not bring any one with him, but would bring the keys of the graves in which they were, and unlock the graves and take them out." And yet he urged us to 'take the Scriptures as they read.'

—The Adventist was undoubtedly caricatured, but let us see how wide of the mark he really was: 'For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, EVEN so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.' The words 'even so, were no doubt deliberately left out by the scoffer. He evidently believes in taking the Scriptures as they don't read And if they do not read to suit him he can leave out a few words occasionally. After this exposure we may be pardoned for disbelieving his other story.

IT is only a little while since that in two Romanist Cathedrals in New York, upon the same Sunday sermons were preached upon the end of the world. In St Patricks Cathedral "the very Rev. Dr. Starrs V. G." discoursed of the general judgment. He advised all to be ready for it, and warned the wicked that "everlasting torture" was their certain doom unless they repented before that day should overtake them. In St. Francis Xavier's church Father Merrick inquired whether "the end of the world is at hand." The reporter says he represented that we were "on the very verge of the general smash-up." The priest himself, after detailing the signs of the times

Asked if the end might not be very near after all. When all was disorder and confusion among nations, the Pope a prisoner, and corruption and infidelity rampant, the anti-Christ might come as the dictator to subject all, and then would come Christ to conquer his enemies, then the end when justice would be made manifest, and the good receive their reward, and the wicked their punishment for eternity. The reverend preacher closed by earnestly exhorting his hearers to so live as to be ready for the "final call," come when it might.

THE TIDE RISING.

There are ebbs and flows of feeling and action in all human enterprises. The politician cannot keep his constituents always at the point they occupy just before election. Reformers are obliged to resort to general meetings to agitate the public mind and force attention to the desired point. And in the church, whatever may be our opinions as to what should be, we must all admit that but few maintain the high tide in both feeling and action steadily from season to season, from one year's end to another.

For a time the interest of the West in its Publishing Association has been somewhat at an ebb. That is, considering our growth in numbers, and our work the first five years after our organization, there has been a relative falling off. Instead of gaining six or seven, or even nine hundred subscribers in a year, we have had to be content with the addition of from two to three hundreds per annum.

There have been a variety of causes for this. Undoubtedly the great fall in the prices of produce, which so largely reduced the incomes of most of our patrons, was the chief cause of this falling off. Men who have not been at all reduced to poverty have felt straitened by the reduction of their income, and the stopping of papers, particularly religious papers, seems to be one of the most natural economies in the world. But it is poor economy, as many are beginning to find out. There are a multitude of things that can be better spared from the house than the weekly paper.

Another reason for the falling off in the relative growth of our list is that we cannot afford to offer premiums and gifts to subscribers as others can. Many, with no unfriendly spirit to us at all, have introduced other papers in order to secure a Sewing Machine, a Dictionary, or some other really valuable consideration. This is all right; we have no fault to find; and we only speak of it right here to suggest to all of our subscribers that they go to work for a premium, to be paid in printing THE TIMES on better paper, and making its contents more valuable and interesting than ever.

We asked for 500 new subscribers a short time since. We ought to have a thousand within six months. We appeal particularly to the ministry to help us. One brother wrote recently —"I make it a point to make a special appeal for THE TIMES wherever I go." We knew that before he wrote. For from every place he visits we almost invariably receive a list of new subscribers. Others go from place to place, and we have excellent reports of the results of their labors, but no subscribers to THE TIMES. If ten or a dozen members are added to a church, ought not some of them at least be added to the body at large? Should not our common interests be cultivated as well as those of a local character? It seems to us that they should.

That THE TIMES is to live and be sustained is not an open question: that was settled long ago. But the point is whether it shall be raised by a rising tide of feeling, energy and material aid to a level where its usefulness shall be vastly increased! Why not? Our own opinion is that if all who are really interested in the cause would take hold of the matter, we might as well as not have a circulation of eight or ten thousand copies a week. One new name from each of our present subscribers would effect this result. Some cannot get one. Others can get twenty. Who will try to bring about so desirable a result as doubling the circulation of THE TIMES the coming year? We think the tide is rising. We shall watch with interest to see if we are right.

AN ATTEMPT TO HOLD UP OBSOLETE THEOLOGY.

A correspondent in San Francisco sends us the following sketch of a discourse in that city, already briefly alluded to by us:

Dr. Cunningham's text was Mat. ch. 28, concluding with the verse on "everlasting punishment." There was nothing really new in his argument, and yet it was a fesh way of putting some things. They hang and hurrah immensely on the word 'annihilation.' He said "hell-fire" was conscious misery, i. e., not literal fire, but "ungratified appetite, remorse," etc., "gnawings of conscience." "Everlasting fire" was applied to the agent. Was it to be supposed that the object which the agent acted upon would be annihilated and the agent continue on and on, etc? He said the devil was divinity abused!! All moral creatures or agents have a spark or element of the divine in them. Would God destroy a part of his own nature? or reabsorb to himself a part poisoned by affiliation with evil? [Right here I would inquire if God would keep a part of himself or his nature in eternal 'affiliation' with aggressive evil?] He used Dives and Lazarus in the usual orthodox way—never touched the nature of man by any argument; but assumed that an immateriality was the real man, etc. Of course!

—We do not see just what the defenders of orthodoxy are going to do. If they keep still, our views grow and thrive; and if they oppose, they involve themselves in palpable absurdities that set those who were indifferent before to thinking. On the whole, we think they had better keep still. But can they? We mean to do our part in forcing them to meet the issue. Who will help?

TO THE MINISTRY IN THE WEST.

We never needed your sympathy, co-operation and prayers more than now. And in no way—next to your own especial work, of which nothing can take the place—can you help the common cause in which we are engaged so much as by efforts to enlarge our subscription list. Will you not institute inquiries among the churches and in the fields where you labor, as to who do and who do not take THE TIMES; and urge upon all the importance of not only taking it, but paying for it in advance?

Call attention to it in some of your public services; and in fields that you can only visit occasionally show them how they can have a weekly preacher for about six mills a day, or four cents a week.

Introduce THE TIMES largely among your people, and you will find better support and more intelligent and appreciative audiences as the result. Try it!

ADVENTIST POOR PROSCRIBED.

Our attention has been called to certain facts in regard to the sufferers by the fires in Eastern Michigan, by the following letter. Read and judge for yourselves of the power of sectarianism in these enlightened days:

Brethren and sisters: I want to ask if it is a crime to preach Advent doctrine. "Why do you ask that?" I will tell you. When the news of the terrible fires were spread abroad the people everywhere arose to our relief and sent supplies and clothing in such quantities as would have made all reasonable people truly grateful. But some have received an abundance, while others lack. For this there are various reasons. I can only answer for myself. The reason I am denied aid is, that I "preach such doctrine." Well, how do I know that? Because they were asked why they did not give me such things as I needed at Port Hope. The reply was, "Because he is preaching such doctrine." Well, was the reply, does he not preach the truth? And the answer was that I had no business meddling with those things, but might preach as other preachers do. One would indeed think the time had indeed come when "men will not endure sound doctrine, but turn away from the truth, and be turned unto fables." O Lord, open their eyes that they may see, turn and repent before it is too late."

There is the simple story. We confess to not a little indignation in reading it. We have made no especial appeal through our columns in behalf of Adventists particularly, because we knew that all through the West our people had done their full proportion in contributing to the general fund for the relief of both Michigan, Wisconsin and Chicago. A considerable sum could be wisely disbursed in Chicago and Eastern Michigan. Winter with much sickness, sorrow and suffering is still before us. If any have a mind to give, especially for our proscribed brethren and sisters, we will see it faithfully applied for their relief.

Among The Sleepers.

Last week at our Teacher's meeting we studied the lesson for the following sabbath together. It was a lesson on the Ten Virgins, and one which I scarcely thought men would dare to so distort as to make it teach anything but the duty of watching, and making preparation for the coming again of the Son of man. I had looked forward to this lesson as one in which the cry would again be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom Cometh!" When we allow our mind to be filled with the distracting things of the world; when our life seems set in grooves, and we drift silently around our vision so filled with the present, and our thoughts occupied with the great questions, "what shall I eat and, wherewithal shall I be clothed?" that we do not see how rapidly we are progressing toward the great events of threatening magnitude that are already coming up, ahead and casting their shadows across our pathway; at such times we too often allow slumber to touch our eyelids and make them heavy, while we think that all things continue as they were; where is the promise of his coming? how reproaching it is then, and how it wakes one to a newness of life, when, with a few of the faithful, watching servants of our Lord we talk over his coming who is to reign forevermore. But such a privilege is not often granted the writer. We passed through the lesson, and in sombre colors had presented to us the folly of those who slept, knowing that their vessels were unprovided with oil, against his coming when they were certain he would come sooner or later. After this preface we listened to our pastor's exhortation about how careful we should be to warn men of the approach of death, which is here pictured to us as the coming of the Bridegroom, and if they are not prepared when he comes, the door of heaven (?) will be shut upon them forevermore. The lesson was about to close, when one brother who could not bear the idea of such an interpretation going unchallenged longer, administered a rebuke that it is to be hoped made a good impression at least on some. He said it is indeed sad to think of those who slumbered and slept, and we may ever presume that they talked among themselves before sleep overtook them, saying, he will not see me very soon, for although he told us that we might expect him about this hour, and we know he always keeps his word; still we believe he does not reckon time as we do and therefore we can safely sleep for awhile.

I can imagine them saying to one who would urge upon them the duty of watching—"Go away, you are laboring under a delusion, in fact you are fanatical and a disturber of our rest.' Nevertheless, the brother continued, "how fortunate it would have been if some friend had been near, one who loved the coming One and his appearance, to constantly keep them aware of the danger of sleeping and to speak to them of the joy that would be theirs if they remained awake, watching and longing for the one who was nigh at hand, and who has said, Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find watching.' They would probably have treated their friend with contempt, (as they are treated today who dare to say 'the coming of the Lord is nigh') and they would have been suspected of teaching an untruth; heresy, may be." These quiet remarks made a perceptible impression upon the listeners, and looks of intelligence passed from one to another indicating the thought that if expressed in words would have been—Oh this is one of these Adventists who believes that Jesus is really coming to earth again, and that very soon. But no one said anything. The message was an unpleasant one, and though some felt how deserved the words were, yet they concluded if there was any truth in the warning, surely our pastor would have sounded the note of preparation—but he sees no cloud in the horizon which indicates any change in world's affairs—so while the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept.

Brethren, if there is any sign of the times that is convincing beyond a doubt that the coming of Christ is an event we may expect at any moment, it is the fact that over all alike, wise and foolish, sleep has settled deep and heavy, and the time has come when faith in a second coming of the Master. has almost died out, except here and there, where a faithful one is watching and praying and longing for the coming Bridegroom. There is no sound along the line; no warning cry is heard, no signal comes from those who cry peace, peace; all things continue a they were, and it may fairly be said that when we look at the small proportion of the hopeful ones, truly all slumber and sleep, and this being the case we should be more than ever watchful, and though men reject us and say "that is your hobby," yet the insinuation should be a spur in our heel to ride this hobby, always with moderation, but with yet more zeal and fidelity. We may well remember that one of whom the Evangelists testify, that "he went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of God" and whose last verbal message to man announces the glorious truth's "behold I come quickly."

"The church has waited long, her absent Lord to see;
And still in loneliness she waits, a friendless stranger she.
Age after age has gone, sun after sun has set,
And still in weeds of widowhood she weeps a mourner yet.
Come then, Lord Jesus, come!"

C. R. S.

A new treatise on precious stones declares that after all, mankind if wise, will say of precious stone, the most valuable as well as useful stone in the world is the grindstone.

The Rev. Dr. Butler, a missionary from India said upon a recent visit to this country, that with every opportunity for observation in foreign lands, he had "never heard a hearty laugh from a woman outside the pale of Christianity' and that he had never seen among them a happy female face."

Yes—trust. What is the preparation for lying down? It is to lie down. What is the preparation for getting up? It is getting up. There is no preparation for serving God. but to trust God All you have to do is to lay your head upon his bosom—to rely upon his providence.—Beecher.

Whatever religious teachers we have if their instructions do not accord with God's Word, we are bound to reject them. If even an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto us, he is accursed. Not only does he shut himself out from the kingdom, but all his deluded followers will be shut out with him.

God did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but He came down and walked with them in it. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; he sent his angels to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not, in answer to the prayer of Paul, remove the thorn in the flesh; but he gave him a sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

Many lose the opportunity of saying a kind thing by waiting to weigh the matter too long. Our best impulses are too delicate to endure much handling. If you fail to give them expression the moment they rise, they effervesce, evaporate, and are gone. If they do not sour, they become flat, losing all life and sparkling by keeping. Speak promptly when you feel kindly.

If any of you idle professors can really prove that you belong to yourselves, I have nothing more to say to you: but if you profess to have a share in the redeeming sacrifice of Christ, I am ashamed of you if you do not go to work the very moment the signal is given. You have no right to waste what Jesus Christ bought "with a price."

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

By order of Br. G. Thomson, we have sent 100 copies of his "Who are Sadducees?" to Br Bowman for distribution in South Carolina. They will do good there.——The Sacramento, Cal. Record announces Advent meetings in that city this winter, for 'several days, which, we trust, means weeks.——Disease is doing its worst among our laborers. We have just learned that Br. P. A. Smith, in Florida, is slowly recovering from sickness that nearly cost his life.——Br. S. Baldwin has been preaching three miles North of Corydon, Iowa, where five soul's have embraced Christ.——A clergyman in Wisconsin writes us: 'I know that many are reading all they can get upon this subject (life and death), and I am almost daily receiving letters from both ministers and laymen of different denominations, and so I know that the people are interested. I came into the theory some years ago from my own study of the Scriptures in the original, and I find nothing to lead me to change my mind. I have been driven out of my denomination, but most of my church went with me. I feel a deep interest in the subject, and may sometime write out some thoughts for publication.——Br. J. H. Whitmore baptised two souls in Genesee River, Rochester N. Y. on Sunday week ——We understand that Br. Fenn's, friends propose to relieve him of the necessity of giving himself to some secular pursuit in order to provide for his family, and, will see that he is sustained in the work of the ministry. He could not well be spared from the gospel vineyard. We need more laborers; not to discharge those already in the service. ——Brn L. H. Davis and C. W. Smith are laboring at Milroy, Ill.——Br. Gibson says that 'the shepherds at Salisbury (Ill.) are greatly alarmed lest their flocks should believe a dead man to 'be dead,' and 'that torment to the wicked will not endure to all eternity.' We hope the flocks will escape from such shepherds.——Br. D. R Mansfield recently spent eleven days with Br. Scott in Floyd Co., Ind Some ten soul's were added to the church.

The Times.

At Home.

The Romanists of England have arranged to convert all the negroes of the Southern States into Roman Catholics. At least they have organized a mission for that purpose and seem sanguine of success.

The Chicago Tribune boldly asserts that the Methodist church has been of late years a part of the political apparatus for filling the public offices of the country. 'This' it says 'is perfectly notorious.' If it is true that church had best beware. It may gain great honor in the political field; but it will surely "fall from grace."

Chicago recently held a city election, and supposed she had put her affairs in the hands of honest men. It appears there is some mistake about the matter. The Common Council can be bought up at $300 a member—so the Tribune intimates.

The scenes in the Senate of the United States since the commencement of the present session of Congress have been any thing but creditable to that body or the nation. A proposition for a standing committee on retrenchment and reform met with violent opposition on purely political and partizan grounds; and there is not strength enough in public opinion to put a stop to the disgraceful private caucusing and public bickering which are at present our national shame. One would think Senate Chamber had become the arena for personal and political controversies rather than the place for wise and prudent legislation.

ABROAD.

The Prince of Wales is now recovering.

Some 5,000 persons died of small-pox in London during the late epidemic. At least 10,000 have been maimed, disfigured or reduced to beggary by the disease.

A letter from Egypt says that the entire East is restless under the cholera scourge. Alexandria, which is the great highway to and from India, threatens to disseminate the cholera around the globe.

Seventy-five Mohammedan pilgrims from Algeria to Mecca were recently drowned in the harbor at Alexandria. The vessel they were in was run down by a steamer. Many of them were sunk by the weight of the gold about their persons.

Paraguay, from whence such dismal news was regularly received for long years, though conquered is still rebellious. Her Dictator is dead, but she stubbornly resists in making her conquerors as much trouble as possible. Several persons were killed in a late riot.

The last census of Japan gives the number of inhabitants at 34,785,321, of which 1,872,959 are engaged in literature and the military service, and 31,951,821 belong to the trading and working classes. The number of priests of Buddha amounts to 244,869, and that of priests of Sintu to 163,140. The receipts of the Government are estimated at 61,118,438.

The Pope is in trouble. He does not really want to stay where he is, but he cannot go any where else. The question, however, has been debated, and the majority of the Cardinals in secret conclave some time back decided to ask his Holiness to leave the city. The Pope replied, asking where he could go. The Cardinals proposed the Austrian Tyrol, but Pius IX. refused to take refuge on the territory of a power considered to be his greatest enemy. Malta was then suggested, but also declined on account of England being a Protestant power, and of the inconvenient situation of the island. The Pope expressed a preference for France, if compelled to leave Rome, but pointed out how difficult would be his position amid the political agitations to which France is subject.

Prospectus,

THE NEW YORK

TRIBUNE,

The consolidation of Italy as long fragmentary and impotent but now powerful State with Rome as its capital; the humiliation of France through a series of crushing defeats, ending with the siege and capitulation of her proud and gay metropolis; the expulsion of the Bourbons from the Spanish throne, and the substitution for them of a scion of the most liberal among the royal houses; the virtual absorption of the kingdoms of Saxony, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, with Baden, Hesse, the Hanse Towns, &c., under the headship of Prussia into the triumphant and powerful empire of Germany; and the arming of Russia to reassert her preponderance in the councils of Europe, or to prosecute her often postponed but never relinquished designs on the great city founded by Constantine and the vast but decaying and anarchial dominion of the Sultan, all combine to invest with profound interest the ever changing phases of our tidings from the Old World. The Tribune, through trusted correspondents stationed at all points of Europe where great movements are in progress or imminent, aims to present a complete and instructive panorama of events on that continent, and to mirror the prolonged struggle between middle-age Feudalism and Ecclesiasticism on the one hand and Nineteenth-Century skepticism and secularism on the other. Recognizing a Divine Providence in all that proceeds and is, it looks hopefully on the great conflict as destined (like our own recent convulsion) to evolve from strife, disaster, and seeming chaos, a fairer and happier future for the toiling masses of mankind.

In our own country a war upon corruption and rascality in office has been waged in our City, whereby the government of our State has been revolutionized through an initial triumph of Reform which surpasses the most sanguine anticipations. It is morally certain that the movement thus inaugurated cannot, in its progress, be circumscribed to any locality or any party, but that its purifying influence is destined to be felt in every part of the Union, rebuking venality, exposing robbery, wresting power from politicians by trade, and confiding it in those worthiest and fittest to wield it. To this beneficent and vitally needed Reform, The Tribune will devote its best energies, regardless of personal interest or party predilections, esteeming the choice of honest and faithful men to office as of all New Departures the most essential and auspicious.

The virtual surrender by the Democratic party of its hostility to Equal Rights regardless of Color has divested our current politics of half their bygone intensity. However parties may henceforth rise or fall, it is clear that the fundamental principles which have hitherto honorably distinguished the Republicans are henceforth to be regarded as practically accepted by the whole country. The right of every man to his own limbs and sinews—the equality of all citizens before the law—the inability of a State to enslave any portion of its people—the duty of the Union to guarantee to every citizen the full enjoyment of his liberty until he forfeits it by crime—such are the broad and firm foundations of our National edifice; and palsied be the hand which shall seek to displace them! Though not yet twenty years old, the Republican party has completed the noble fabric of Emancipation, and may fairly invoke thereon the sternest judgment of Man and the benignant smile of God.

Henceforth the mission of our Republic is one of Peaceful Progress. To protect the weak and the humble from violence and oppression—to extend the boundaries and diffuse the blessings of Civilization—to stimulate Ingenuity to the production of new inventions for economizing Labor and thus enlarging Production—to draw nearer to each other the producers of Food and Fabrics, of Grains and of Metals, and thus enhance the gains of Industry by reducing the cost of transportation and exchanges between farmers and artisans—such is the inspiring task to which this Nation now addresses itself, and by which it would fain contribute to the progress, enlightenment of our race. To this great and good work The Tribune contributes its zealous and persistent efforts.

Agriculture will continue to be more especially elucidated in its Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions, to which some of the ablest and most successful tillers of the soil will steadily contribute. No farmer who sells $500 worth of produce per annum can afford to do without our Market Reports, or others equally lucid and comprehensive. If he should read nothing else but what relates to his own calling and its rewards, we believe no farmer who can read at all can afford to do without such a journal as The Tribune. And we aspire to make it equally valuable to those engaged in other departments of Productive Labor. We spend more and more money on our columns each year, as our countrymen's generous patronage enables us to do; and we are resolved that our issues of former years shall be exceeded in varied excellence and interest by those of 1872. Friends in every State! help us to make our journal better and better, by sending in your subscriptions and increasing your Clubs for the year just before us!

THE ADVENT TIMES.

The Times, the only periodical published by Advent Christians West of Rochester, N. Y., will enter upon its eighth year in 1872. Its success in the past has been flattering, and its managers intend that in the future it shall deserve even greater prosperity and more rapid growth.

A leading feature of the paper for at least six months, will be a discussion between the Editor, and Eld. Clark Braden, a noted debater of the Disciple church. Each paper will contain an article from each of the debaters—an affirmative and reply.

The discussion will be based upon the Scriptures, and involve (1) the nature of man; and (2) the future reward and punishment—questions of vital moment and intense interest, as every person who has felt the popular pulse well knows.

In the first proposition Eld. Braden affirms the endless conscious existence of the spirit of man.

In the second the editor of The Times will affirm the unconscious state of the dead, and the resurrection their only hope.

In the third he will affirm that literal destruction is the doom of the finally impenitent, while eternal life is the gift of God through Christ.

In the fourth and last proposition Eld. Braden affirms that the final punishment will consist in banishment from God and the society of all pure beings, in a state of endless conscious existence.

The person who wishes to read both sides of this question in condensed, pithy form, will hardly have a better opportunity.

Besides the above, the Editor will furnish his "Journal," or narrative of the progress of Adventism in the parts he may visit, with incidents of travel, experience, the past history of the cause, and its present prospects.

The editorial department will be kept up, and filled with articles upon live questions, and "the present truth" in all its features. The signs of the times, fulfillment of prophecy, and everything indicative of "the last times" will receive due attention.

We have many able correspondents, whose contributions have greatly strengthened The Times in the past, and we anticipate even better things from them in the future.

The pages devoted to letters and extracts, and accounts of travel and missionary work must necessarily grow in interest as the field widens, and we have more workers, more writers, and more to narrate.

The Times is not a "news" paper; yet it will continue to give a weekly digest of the more important events of the day, at home and abroad—a terse record of the signs of the times, and indications of the approaching crisis of the world.

We shall give the news concerning Adventism all over the world, in brief, so far as we can obtain it.

We shall occasionally give pieces of music and illustrations that will interest all.

Finally, The Times will, we think, deserve, and we know it needs, five hundred paying subscribers at once! Shall we have them?

Reader: Do you take The Times? If not, subscribe for it at once. Try it a year, or for six months, at least. $2 a year; $1 for six months

The Autumn Evening.

Behold the Autumn evening light,
It melts in deepest gloom;
So calmly Christians sink away,
Descending to the tomb.

The winds breathe soft, the withering leaf
Scarce whispers from the tree;
So gently flows the parting breath
When good men cease to be.

How beautiful on all the hills
The evening light is shed;
'Tis like the peace the Christian gives
To mourners round his bed.

But soon the morning's happier light
The glories shall restore;
The eyelids, that are sealed in death
Shall wake to close no more.

Correspondence.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

Monday, Nov. 27. I have been looking over a sermon by a late popular minister, Walter Colton, on the "dignity, destiny and danger of the soul," from Mk. 8:37, 38. I find it in the Pulpit, p. 316. He assumed first that the soul was an immortal entity, encased within the man. And of its destruction he says:

"The destruction of which the soul is in danger is total—extending to all its powers and capacities. Were all its other faculties at an immense remove from the pit of perdition, and the imagination only doomed to hover around this place of unalleviated suffering, with what representations of sorrow would it confound the peace of the soul! The sight of an execution will live long and frightfully in the mind of the spectator. He still sees the miserable victim of justice suspended from the scaffold, and still hears his coffin rumble down the untimely grave. If the violent extinction of animal life will so haunt and distress the mind of the spectator, what would those sighs, and groans, and unavailing lamentations do which crowd the world of wo? Even in such a situation the soul must be inconceivably miserable.

"What, then, must be its anguish when itself becomes the sufferer?—when the spectator becomes the victim!—when all these appalling representations of agony form in endless reality through its every sense!—when every capacity is full and overflowing with unmingled sorrow!—when every effort at relief ends in a gushing sense of utter helplessness!—when every recollection only deepens its distress,—every anticipation only strengthens its despair,—and every sensation only brings with it a crushing consciousness of utter ruin!

"The world where it once dwelt is changed—its busy myriads are gone,—its palaces and towers are in the dust,—and the knell of time alone is heard through its lifeless desolation. All is as one empty grave! The soul is thus left to its own unspoken, unpitied misery—abandoned of all sympathetic beings—and impassably confined within the burning circle of its quenchless agony!

"The scorpion, begirt by flame, can destroy itself: but this self-destructive power is not a property of the soul. Essentially immortal, it will and must survive, though it survives only to part for death. The destruction of the soul is, therefore, not only total, extending to all its powers and capacities, but it is eternal. This is the darkest and wildest feature of its doom. It might, perhaps, brave itself to the wrenching tortures of its rack had it but the most distant prospect of relief: it might, still, perhaps, endure its sufferings could they but cease when as many centuries have elapsed as there are particles that composed the globe. It might then watch in its pangs for the numbering of the last lingering sand; but there is no such reprieve, even in the farthest future. This globe might roast away, though but one particle were to perish in a thousand centuries, yet the lost soul would even then be but in the infancy of its wo!"

The above horrible rhetoric is founded upon the fabulous idea of the immortality of the soul. The Bible teaches that the soul is the man. Christ asks what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose himself. (Lk. 9:25; comp. Mat. 10:28.) He calls the punishment of the wicked "destruction of soul [life] and body in gehenna." And Paul (2 Thes. 1:7, 8) declares it to be the punishment of "everlasting destruction." This we can understand. But who can comprehend the philosophy of Mr. Colton, or the Platonic doctors? They talk of the soul as an essence, as an immaterial phantom, living without actual organic existence, without form, or place of being. And yet in this mystical existence this phantom is said to live and suffer the indescribable horrors forever. It is about time the religious world were done with such fearful nonsense.

Dined with Br. Wm. A. Morse, an old believer, whom I saw last in Buffalo, N. Y., a long time since. He said his household still cling to the faith. I spoke at night on the peace of the gospel, and the way to attain it. Br. Hough followed with interesting remarks. The spirit of the meeting is good.

Tuesday, Nov. 28. Quite a number have written for me to visit and give lectures in all this part of the State. I deeply regret that it is not in my power to comply with their kind, pressing invitations at this time.

Br. Hough had to leave to-day for home, so I have the work of the week on my hands alone. I have spoken twice to-day from Mal. 3:16, 17, in the p. m. I urged the church to take hold of the work and help me—almost every soul in the house spoke or prayed. Signs of good. At night spoke from Ps. 37:9–11. The destinies of the "meek," and of the "evil doer." The first will live forever in the abundance of peace; the last be cut off, and cease to be. Deep solemnity, and some hearts were touched.

I received a note to-day from an old friend in Wisconsin, who used to hear me thirty years ago. He says I must come to his place and preach. He wants to hear again on the Abrahamic inheritance, the coming and kingdom of Christ, the prophetic periods and signs of the times. These all have a strain of music for his ear, and their melody will never be lost till lost in the louder strains of the world to come.

Wednesday, Nov. 29. Spoke this p. m. from Mat. 5:1–14, and at night 1 Cor. 15:29–38. A deep interest both in the church and among the unconverted, but no break. It is hard for men to loose their grip on this world.

Thursday, Nov. 30. Thanksgiving day. We all went to the M. E. church at 11 a. m., and heard Mr. Medd, a Yorkshireman. He gave us a "Yankee" dish in Yorkshire style. He said some good things. The Adventists are not held in high esteem by the Methodists here; so I was not noticed.

Among the notices given out at the close of the services was one for the M. E. Ministerial Conference, with a list of subjects. Some of them indicated what is up among the people in this section. "The intermediate state of the dead." "Do the wicked commit sin in hell." "Sadduceeism of the Seventh-day Adventists." "The relation of circumcision to baptism." These with other subjects show that our Methodist watchmen have some perception of the tendencies of the times. Somebody thinks, with Paul, that the "dead sleep in Christ," while they teach that the dead are in glory. And others think that circumcision has nothing to do with baptism, and they are anxious to show that sprinkling takes the place of circumcision. And then somebody believes with the Sadducees, that dead men are unconscious, and so they are to be branded as Sadducees—a false charge! But the people will believe the truth when they hear it, in spite of this kind of opposition.

I spoke in the p. m. from Phil. 4:6–9, "In everything give thanks," etc. And at night from 1 John 3:8, on the destruction of the work of the devil, or the extinction of evil, at the second advent, when the "seed of the woman is to bruise the serpent's head." The bruising the head can mean nothing short of the extinction of the devil and his seed, and works. One came to Christ, and many are convicted.

Friday, Dec. 1. We have good sleighing, with the mercury nineteen degrees below zero. I have visited some to-day. I learn that the late Eld. Yates Higgins, and Eld. Wm. Sheldon once resided here, and preached to this people with acceptance. The people speak kindly of them. I spoke in the p. m. on Heb. 10:35–39, exhorting all to hold fast the beginning of their confidence, steadfast to the end. We live in days of backsliding. There is no end to this in all the churches. But few live in the full sunshine of the Savior's face.

Saturday, Dec. 2. At the close of the afternoon meeting seven were added to the church. And two have confessed Christ who have not yet been immersed. We had our best meeting this p. m. At night the house was crowded, and there was great seriousness and attention.

Sabbath, Dec. 3. Had a full attendance, though it was a stormy day. One more received to the church. Good interest, and many just ready to break down and come to Christ. But duty calls me to other fields. I have had a very pleasant time with this people. They are an intelligent community. I became acquainted with many excellent families and received their hospitalities. Among them I may speak of Brn. Favor, Hamilton, and Morse. I put up with Br. Philip Bouffler, of the M. E. church, whose generous hospitality I shall not forget. He has done much to help the church. The Lord bless this people, and still prosper the labors of Eld. Hough among them, as in the past.

Monday, Dec. 4. Br. Jerome Favor took me to Sparta. We had a cold ride—over thirty miles, and the mercury twenty degrees below zero. I suffered intensely, but got through without freezing. At sunset we arrived at Br. Banker, in Sparta, where we had a warm and kind reception, and were soon comfortable. Br. and Sr. Thurber, Dr. Mosely and others came in, and we had a social season, talking over old times in the East and new times in the West, relating to the cause. Eld. Thurber had just got a note from my son Edwin, in which he said he intended to leave for Buchanan to-day, if able. But he was weak, and it was doubtful. I feared for my son, he had worked himself down so low. Yet I hoped for the best, and that his useful life might be continued. On arrival in Chicago next morning I found that a telegram had been received announcing that he was dying. My wife and Sr. Mansfield were in the city, waiting for the train north, which we took together, with sad hearts, supposing we were going to our child's funeral. We had no hope that it could be otherwise, except a feeling, such as sometimes comes over one, that it was not so. But this was no evidence. Yet we mingled a gleam of hope with despair. We had one comfort: our Edwin had been faithful, and filled up his life with noble actions; and if taken away, he would soon come forth in the resurrection of the just. But on arrival at Winona we found that Edwin still lived. Oh! how grateful to God we were for his mercy in sparing our dear child. What a different face this fact put on everything. It was to us like a resurrection from the dead. We were soon in the house, congratulating the wife, children, and friends, and, best of all, our son himself. Before I left him at night he seemed to have more strength, and told me that he had felt all the time when conscious, that all was well, living or dying. He was happy and resigned, and in the hands of his Savior; while at the same time his wife was supported by divine grace, with her three little ones looking up to her for care and support.

At 5 p. m., having done my duty to my children, I again took the cars for Chicago, to attend the meeting of the Publishing Association. And here I met Elds. Sheldon, Calkins, D. Mathewson, Burr, Burington, H. G. McCullock, and others, all at work, and was greatly disappointed in not seeing many others whom I hoped to meet at this time. We spent the day in discussions of vital questions connected with the cause. At night Br. Mathewson gave us an excellent sermon on working out our own salvation. It was very instructive, and comforting. It was the first time I had heard him. And I was obliged to say to him, in justice, that he had done me good. Br. Mathewson is now a Western man. He likes us and we like him, and he is whole souled in the work of the Western field. God is blessing his labors. This is the kind of men we need, and the kind we invite to share with us the toils, the joys and sorrows of Western life.

Friday, Dec. 8. We spent the day and evening in earnest consultation and in business, and at night adjourned.

Eld. H. G. McCullock spoke at night, and cheered all hearts. He has recovered his health, and is now in the work as in former times. He was one of the first from the East, in 1861, to commence anew the good work in the West, after all the previous organizations in Illinois had failed. He with Brn. Spencer, Calkins, Clark, and others, now see that their labor was not in vain.

Saturday, Dec. 9. The General Ministerial Conference met at the chapel at 10 a. m., when I gave an Address, which was followed by interesting and very important remarks by Elds. Burr, Mathewson, McCullock, W. L. Himes, Hilliard, and others. It was really the best feast we had yet enjoyed. The attendance was small. The members live over a wide extent of territory, and many could not meet the expense of travel. But it was resolved to keep it up, and rally for fuller meetings in the future.

Came home at night. Among my letters I found the third pressing invitation I have received to visit the Pacific Coast. The appeals are so earnest, so kind, and withal so sensibly urged, that I hardly know how to refuse. I shall go by and by, when the right time comes.

Sabbath, Dec. 10. Have spoken to-day to the church in Buchanan, a kind of Jerusalem to me. We had a good day. My topics were practical. One, on not being weary in well doing (Gal. 6:9); the other, "It is good always to be zealous in a good thing" (Gal. 4:18). I struck kindly out in earnest at the sleepy, lazy Christianity of these last times. On the whole we had a good stirring up to the work of the Lord. It was good to be there. The people turned out largely, and the spirit of the meeting seemed to indicate a good time for a protracted effort. We hope to see a gathering of souls to Christ ere long in Buchanan.

From Samuel Horsecroft, Sussex, England.

I received the books and tracts, and was very glad of them. Thanks for your kindness. We send a little to help you, I hope soon to hear that the $1,000 dollars of debt is wiped out. We would send more but must also attend to the little cause here, and care for the sick, etc.—I see some one writes for "more gravy;" but I think you set a good meal—both meat and gravy. At all events there is enough to make a good Christian give up one of his meals, if necessary, to read about the blessed cause of Christ and and the progress it is making. It does us all good to read about it.

From R. Mann, Schenectady, N. Y.

The time has expired that I subscribed for The Times, but you did not stop it, for which I feel more than obliged. My prayer is, that God may bless you in all your labors. Your paper has been a blessing to me and my family. It has enlightened our minds; but I still wish more light on the truth; and I find it in The Times. I have Whitmore's Immortality. It has brought me to see that I have no immortality, save through Jesus Christ. I wish you to send me more books, for which I enclose the money.

From C. C. Marston, Piatt Co., Ill., Dec. 11, '71.

I am now engaged in a second preaching tour through this country. I have never spent a more enjoyable and to appearances profitable week since I have been preaching "the present truth," than the one that I am now spending with this people. Adventism is a new doctrine to most of the people here. Some have heard of it, but very few have examined it for themselves. There was much prejudice and very strong opposition from the sects; but withal there was a good interest to hear, and it is very evident that the meetings have produced a general spirit of inquiry and investigation. This is a good omen, and if they were attended with no other good result they would not be entirely lost. I preached two nights at Blue Ridge. Here my opposition was from Universalists. They claimed the second advent was in the past. Their principal proof text was Mat. 10:28. It did not require much time to destroy this fortification, however. The first ten verses of the 17th chapter, and the 1st ch. of 2 Peter explains how it was that "some" who were standing with Christ, in Mat. 16:28, did "not taste of death till they saw the Son of man coming in his kingdom." They saw him in "vision" on the mount of transfiguration, It was a miniature picture of what the kingdom would be when finally set up, presented to Peter, James and John in vision.

The pastor stated at the close of the meeting that he had been preaching to the people that "that they were now already in the new Jerusalem," spoken of by John in Rev. 21. He said he was a seeker for the truth and wished me to take up this subject the next eve, and show from the Bible whether he has preached the truth or not. I consented. The house was well filled, and I had good liberty in showing by Bible exegesis that the kingdom is not yet organized, and that the New Jerusalem the capital of God's kingdom is not yet established in the earth. The truth shined brightly and a good impression was made. At the close I sold some books, tracts, etc., and took a few trial subscribers for The Times.

I next went to Mansfield. This is a station on the J. B. & W. R. R. Here the Episcopalians hold the sway, and I found them, to say the least, very hide-bound in their religious principles. The first night an uneducated and unprincipled bigot tried to disturb the peace of the meeting. He became very wrathy and declared that I had falsified the word of God, and said the way I read Scripture was just like a dog chasing a weasel around a stump. This is a fair specimen of his argument. With the candid minds present his conduct was perfectly disgusting. A leading Episcopalian lady, however, went to him after service and said she "felt more like shaking hands with him now than ever." In the language of a good sister, "I admire (?) her taste in selecting associates."

The second night we had a very pleasant and satisfactory meeting. The people were much interested and many expressed their desire to hear more. But my time engaged and I must go on. Saturday night the meeting commenced at Skeels, with a live interest. Sunday a. m. I preached on baptism, after which a large crowd gathered on the banks of the rolling stream to witness the baptism of four believers in Christ. It was a grand and solemn scene. It was my first experience in baptizing when it was necessary to cut the ice. I never enjoyed a baptismal service more in my life. It was a season of special interest. The people were held perfectly spellbound. A deep and solemn impression was made upon the people who witnessed it. Baptizing by the primitive mode—immersion—is a new thing in all this country. We believe it will have an abiding effect. At night I preached, by request, from Lk. 23: 42. Our house was thronged to its utmost, and profound attention was given to the word. The people were perfectly astonished at the symmetry and invaluerbleness of God's word when properly understood. An M. E. brother said to me after meeting "it's so beautiful; so harmonious," etc. The truth is spreading and gaining ground in all this region. Praise the Lord.

The people of Farmer city on the road towards Bloomington have heard of our meetings and are very anxious to hear for themselves. I have consented although, I am very much fatigued, to give them two discourses on my way home. They have tendered me the use of the "Cnristian" meeting house, and promised me a large attendance and as many questions and objections as I can answer. I anticipate a lively time. In the name of the Lord I go to sound the warning trumpet of God's last message to perishing humanity. I love this work. The longer I am engaged in it, the greater is my attachment for it. I feel however my insufficiency and great weakness, but my trust is in the Savior, and my "sufficiency is of God."

I Don't Know.

A few years ago, when I was a teacher in the Sabbath school, I had an occasion to ask one of my scholars this question (it being the lesson): "Are you a Christian?" The answer was "I don't know." Yet the person referred to professed religion. How many there are, who are in the same situation as the person above alluded too. They profess to be lovers of the Lord, and even talk in meeting. But you ask them directly, "Are you a Christian?" and what do they say? Well, if they don't say, "I don't know," they imply as much by saying, "I trust I am." "I think I am." "I hope I am," etc. Oh! how many there are who are in this doubting position. It ought not so to be. But we ought so to live, that instead of these doubts and fears, we should know whose we are, and with Paul say, "I know in whom I have believed."

It is the Christian's privilege to know whose he is. Some may ask, "How can we know?" I answer in the first place, that the book of Inspiration, will inform us. Let us see. John in his first epistle (3: 13, 14.) says: "Marvel not my brethren, if the world hate you. You know that we have passed from death unto life [How?] because we love the brethren." Again (ch. 5: 1, 2, 3.): "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous."

There are other passages that I might quote as evidences, of our acceptance of God. But this is sufficient, I think, to show us that the Scriptures teach how we may know whether we are his children or no. Do we fulfill the requirements? If so, according to the word, we are the children of God.

But, is there no other evidence? Yes, there is; we have the evidence within ourselves; that is, we have "the Spirit bearing witness with our spirit" that we are his. How blessed it is to have the Spirit of the living God bearing witness with our spirit that we are his children, so that we can call God our Father. Let us (those of us that have it) cherish it, and not do any thing to cause it to depart from us. Let us dwell in God, and God in us; "for God is love and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear. He that feareth is not made perfect in love."

How is it? Have we perfect love that casteth out fear? All of us that have doubts of our acceptance of God, let us examine ourselves, and see if we have this love, and, also, have the Spirit of God bearing witness with ours. If we have it, thank God! If not, seek for it; and we shall receive it; and then our peace will be like a river.

Watching and Waiting.

"Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." (Jas. 5: 8.)

How important to each is the question: Am I watching and waiting? As we peruse the Scriptures the exhortations is often and earnestly repeated. We as a people profess to be waiting for our absent King. Do we live consistently with our profession? It is a solemn inquiry.

We greatly need to search our hearts. Are they pure in the sight of God? Should we not always remember that beloved and cheering promise, 'The meek shall inherit the earth'?" Now we sincerely believe this to be our final Eden home. Oh! will we be accounted worthy to abide with Christ forever? As we journey along lifes pathway, amid its cares and perplexities, we often feel that we have done wrong—that we in an unguarded moment, yielded to the deulsive snares of evil. Then what a blessed privelege to know that there is One, ever ready to forgive, love, and pity. As the balm of consolation comes so sweet to our wounded hearts we are nerved afresh for life's battle.

Look where we will, we see sin abounding. Truly we are living in those days when "the love of many shall wax cold." What are the masses of professed Christians? Are they instant in season, with good words and works? Alas, we fear too many, are seekers of pleasure. They have energy and zeal that would be truly commendable in a good and noble cause, in times of fairs, festivals, etc., but go with me to the prayer, and social meeting; are they there with earnest and loving hearts, beseeching sinners to repent, and adorning their profession by godly lives and conversation? Nay we find them not there. Could such hail with joy their coming Lord?

But there are some faithful ones, who are striving by his grace for a home in his kingdom. Be patient, "and he that will come shall come." Let us redouble our diligence, as we behold the signs which herald the glorious advent. Let us work while the day lasts. And now dear brothers and sisters, as we seem to be nearing home, let us each do all we can, that others may see the truth, and become partakers of the blessed hope; that they with us may rejoice as the great day of judgment approacheth. That many may be found watching, and waiting, when Jesus comes. And that I may be one of that number, is the prayer of your sister who earnestly prays, 'Thy kingdom come.'

"Hallelujah amen, hallelujah again,
In a little while we shall be there;
Oh! be faithful, be hopeful, be joyful till then,
And a crown of bright glory we'll wear."

To The Brethren.

As the "Press" is so willing to work, it seems rather a pity that it should not be kept busy by those who are so much interested in the great truths it utters, and the pure religious progress it is trying to foster in the busy world around us. I will therefore, add a few thoughts which perhaps will give variety to the work already on hand. We, here at Volga, are also busy heart and hands in the completion of our new house of worship, from whose free walls shall go forth the glad tidings of the Savior's coming to set up his "everlasting kingdom" upon the new earth, which has long ago been promised to the saints. For Daniel says in his prophecy "that the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Surely that will be a glorious period for which many of us are looking and waiting with blessed expectation of entering through the pearly gates into the city. These with others are the precious truth we are as Adventists trying to teach, and such is the stronghold of prejudice and early training upon the minds of many that they turn away from the truth as it stands recorded in the sacred page, still willing to cling to the traditions of men, "creeds, confessions of faith," rather than the plain declarations of Christ and his apostles.

But notwithstanding all this we are having various kinds of influence. Some are receiving "the love of the truth," others are "searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so." And we have in a great degree united the sects together. Baptists can now walk with Presbyterians and Methodists, seemingly regardless of the little non-essential of baptism, about which they were so tenacious. Well, this is not the first union, of which I have heard, on similar principles. Pilate and Herod were once made friends because of their enmity to Christ, and though they succeeded in cruciifyng him, yet I do not think the opposition of modern times will destroy the doctrine he taught and left behind for our faith and practice.

Thus, we are joyous and happy as we move steadily on in the promulgation of the truth as taught by Christ and his disciples and the early fathers. Our house is up and we are hoping for weather to finish it. We also hope the dear friends interested in us will send the expected help as it is quite an undertaking for a few to build a house of worship. The few however with the Divine blessing will build it. Yet if those in sympathy and faith with us will send us some token of remembrance in the way of material aid it will be most gratefully received by the few who are doing so nobly. We as a church newly organized on the principles of a pure gospel feel very grateful to God for his great mercy toward us, in so signally opening the way for us, and giving us sympathy and aid where we least expected it.

MARY A. TIBBETS.

The Christian Resurrection.

Christ and the apostles assure us that all that are in their graves shall come forth, that the vile bodies of the righteous—the bodies of their humiliation—shall be changed, and made like unto the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ—changed from corruption to incorruption; from dishonor to glory; from weakness to power; from the animal to the pneumatic state, highly refined and sublimated. As the glorified body of Christ in his ascension was developed out of the identical body which was laid in the tomb. and rose from it; so, as our ascenion will take place in the moment of our resurrection, our glorified bodies shall be developed out of the bodies which were laid in the graves, cast into the sea, or otherwise disposed of, after death.

"The greedy sea shall yield her dead,
The earth no more her slain conceal."

Hence the ancient creeds speak of the resurrection of the body—some of them use the word flesh—sarx, caro, for soma, corpus. This has been the established doctrine of the Catholic Church in every age. Our Burial Service recognizes it, from beginning to end—so do our catechisms, institutes, sermons, hymns, etc.

Some may think that it makes no difference whether the gases and earths which shall constitute the material frame after the resurrection shall be the identical particals that constituted it when laid in the grave provided they are so combined that the resurrection-dody shall bear some resemblance to the body before death: and be adapted to the same spirit by which that body was informed. Perhaps not. But perhabs it does make a difference. The great law of congruity may require just such a personal identity as that which is involved in the construction of the resurrection-body out of the same materials which entered into the body at death: and, for this reason, the great miracle that shall be wrought in the last day is styled a resurrection—a getting up again—and not the creation of a new body. Divine omnipotence and omniscience can collect the scattered atoms of the body, refine and exalt them, and so compound them that every form and feature shall be heavenly and divine. It will afford us satisfaction to know that the material elements of our immortal bodies are the same which we possessed when our spirits were united to them in our life upon the earth. No matter how they were degraded by sin, by disease, by corruption, by mixture with other bodies. He who is able to subdue all things unto himself, shall change them, and make them like His own. As Donne quaintly says:

"As men of China, after an age's stay,
Do take up procelain, where they buried clay,
So at this grave, her limbeck, which refines
The diamonds, rubies, sapphires, pearls, and mines,
Of which this flesh was, her soul shall inspire
Flesh of such stuff, as God, when His last fire
Annuls this world, to recompense it shall Make and name them th' elixir of this all."

Spritism an Antidote to Suicide.

Professor Huxley sent the following answer to an invitation:

Sir: I regret that I am unable to accept the invitation of the council of the Dialectical Society to co-operate with the committee for the investigation of "spiritualism; and for two reasons: In the first place, I have no time for such an inquiry, which would involve much trouble, and (unless it were unlike all the inquiries of the kind I have known) much annoyance. In the second place I take no interest in the subject. The only case of "spiritulism" I have had the opportunity of examining into for myself was as gross an imposture as ever came under my notice. But, supposing the phenomena to be genuine, they do not interest me. If anybody would endow me wite the faculty of listning to the chatter of old wo- and curates in the nearest cathedral town, I should decline the privilege, haveing better things to do. And if the folk in the spiritual world do not more wisely and sensibly than their friends report them to do, I put them in the same category. The only truth I can see in the demonstration of the truth of "spiritualism" is to furnish an additional argument against suicide.

Better live a crossing-sweeper than die and be made to talk twaddle by a medium hired at a guinea a seance.

I am sir etc., T. H. HUXLEY.

Robert Hall defines fanaticism as "such an overwhelmig impression of the ideas relating to the future world as disqualifies one for the duties of life."

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canada) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

We have incurred considerable expense to bring this work before the public in an attractive form; and we trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent-Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it." Pledges.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to their names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000) whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H Hubbard, $5,00; S Pike, 10,00; B P Butts, 5,00; Thos Davidson, 5,00; G E Merrill, 5,00; H W Norville, 5,00; F A Childs, 25,00 (pd); Jas P Morse, 1,00; A C Hueston, 1,00; A Brother, 5,00; A Brother, 150,00; A Friend of THE TIMES, 25,00; G Shurtleff, 5,00; H Holder, 2,00; J F Huber, 5,00; R Mann, 5,00; Mary L Hemy, 5,00; L S Conner, 1; E Cheney, 2,00; O N, $2; S Nye, $25; Cascade (Iowa) church, $10.00; L. H. Ferrell (pd.) $10.00; R. Visser, 1,00; H. M. Jones, 5,00; J. Lowry, 5,00; R. H Evans, 2, 0.

It does seem to us that this list of pledges does not grow as fast as it should. We are doing something toward extinguishing our debt, but not enough. Seven more "hundreds" would wipe it out. Many are doing nobly. Will not others respond soon.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the needed names?

John S. Lawyer, M. B. Geer, Eld. J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Barr, the Chicago church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber, Grand St. (N. Y.) church, Auburn (Ill.) church, C. Libby (pd.), R. R. York, Wm. M. Hall, J. C. Stone, W. E. Brown, M F Wistrom.

Who will help fill up the list?

Book Notices, Etc.

THE BIBLIOTHECA SACRA AND THEOLOGICAL ECLECTIC for October has come to hand. This unrivalled Quarterly, containing about 200 pages of reading matter, making a volume of 800 pages yearly and presenting standard discussions in the sphere of Christian literature, should be in the hands of every preacher; and many of our more intelligent laymen would find its articles a great help to them in their religious investigations. Dr Barrows continues in the present number his articles on Revelation and Inspiration, and Dr. Park his on the three Fundamental Methods of Preaching. These are worth to any minister the yearly price of the Quarterly. The other articles in the number for October are Pre-Historic Literature; Instinct; the Divine Agency in the Establishment, Administration, and Triumphs of Christ's Kingdom; Reply to Dr. Fisk on Rom. 5: 12-21; Perkin's Tuscan Sculptors; Editorial Correspondence; and notices of recent publications. Research and criticism, as developed in this excellent publication, are doing much towards purifying and extending Biblical learning. We have here the latest and ripest thought of Christian scholarship.

THE GREAT ENGLISH QUARTERLIES: The Leonard Scott Publishing Co's reprint of the London Quarterly Review for October fully equals any of the other numbers of the valuable series of periodicals which that house has so long been engaged in supplying to the reading public. The interest and variety of its contents may be seen from the following brief enumeration: 1. Spiritualism and its recent Converts; 2. Byron and Tennyson; 3. Beer, Brewing, and Public Houses; 4. Guicciardini's Personal and Political Records; 5. Continued Mismanagement of the Navy; 6. Industrial Monopolies; 7. Jowett's Plato; 8. Army Administration and Government Policy; 9. The Commune and the Internationale. It is claimed by the publishers that the periodicals issued by them do not fail to discuss the most interesting and important events of the day in a comprehensive manner, nearly approaching historical completeness; and, taking this closing number of the year as a specimen, this claim has a solid foundation, for there is hardly any division of the great army of readers but will find some subject in the above brief list which has occupied its attention during the past year.

Those desirous of making a good selection of periodicals for the coming year are unhesitatingly recommended to take one or all of the series issued by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, and which now consists of the London Quarterly, Edinburgh, Westminster, and British Quarterly Reviews, and Blackwood's Magazine, and which are furnished either separately or together at the following low scale of prices, less than half the cost of the originals:

Terms of Subscription.—Any one Review, $4; any two, $7; any three, $10; all four, $12; Blackwood's Magazine, $4; Blackwood and one Review, $7; Blackwood and two Reviews, $10 Blackwood and three Reviews, $13; Blackwood and four Reviews, $15.

Obituary.

EVANS At Stillwell, Laporte Co. Ind., Nov 21, 1871, at the residence of his son-in law, H. J. Winchell John Evans; in his 82d year.

He and his wife had lived together for sixty years, lacking only a few days; had raised a family of seven children, and his was the first death in the family. A good man, a kind husband, and beloved parent; after his long life he now rests till the resurrection. Services by the writer. D. MATHEWSON.

CHIVALIER Little Esther, daughter of A. and L. M. C. Chivalier, died Nov. 15, 1871; aged 8 weeks, 5 days.

She fell asleep so quietly that her mother did not know when she died. She sleeps to awake in the new earth bright, to die no more.

Esther sleeps but not forever:
There will be a glorious dawn;
Then we'll meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn.

Sermon by the writer. F. H KENNY.

MARTINE. At Long Point, Ill., Oct. 27, 1871, of diptheria, Charlie, son of Shults and Meda Martine; aged 2 years, 9 months, 25 days.

Yes, our darling is gone. He was a most affectionate child, but that dread enemy, death, snatched him from our embrace. We hardly knew that he was sick until he was gone. We are left to mourn. Oh! with what fond recollection do we look back and recall his many little childish ways; for he was all life. I mean, with the help of God, to live so that I may meet him in the kingdom. M. MARTINE.

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect by the committee. The other machines ranged from 24½ down to 21½. This machine is specially admirable for its light draught—which saves horseflesh; it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

USUAL PRICE, $160.00;

Body and Mind.—No. 2.

In the following passage Dr. Maudsley calls attention to the fact that the human countenance is capable of expressing a variety of more complex emotions than animals are capable of. "Those who would degrade the body, in order, as they imagine, to exalt the mind, should consider more deeply than they do the importence of our muscular expressions of feeling. The manifold shades and kinds of expressions which the lips present—their gibes, gambols, and flashes of merriment; the quick language of a quivering nostrils; the varied waves and ripples of beautiful emotion which play on the human countenance, with the spasms of passion that disfigure it, all which we take such pains to embody in art—are simple effects of muscular action, and might be produced by electricity or any other stimulus, if we could only apply it in suitable force to proper muscles.... Fix the countenance in the pattern of a particular emotion—in a look of anger, of wonder, or of scorn—and the emotion whose appearance is thus imitated will not fail to be aroused. And if we try, while the features are fixed in the expression of one passion, to call up in the mind a quite different one, we shall find it impossible to do so. This agrees with the experiments of Mr. Braid on persons whom he had put into a state of hypnotysm; for, when the features or the limbs were made by him to assume the expression of a particular emotion, thereupon the emotion by the patient, who began to act as if he was under its influence. We perceive then that the muscles alone are not the machinery by which the mind acts upon the world, but that their actions are essential elements in our mental operations. The superiority of the human over the animal mind seems to be essentially connected with the greater variety of muscular action of which man is capable: were he deprived of the infinitely varied movements of the hands, tongue, larynx, lips and face, in which he is so far ahead of the animals, it is probable that he would be no better that an idiot, notwithstanding he might have a normal development of brain."

WAS ACTUALLY FELT

In his second lecture Dr. Maudsley treats of idiocy and cerebral development. "Among Europeans the average weight of brain is greater in educated than in uneducated persons; its size, other circumstances being equal, bearing a general relation to the mental power of the individual. Dr. Thurman concludes, from a series of carefully compiled tables, that while the average weight of the brain in Europeans is 49 oz., it was 54.7 oz., in ten distinguished men; and Prof. Wagner found a remarkably of the convolutions in the brains of five very eminent men which he examined .... The native Australian, who is one of the lowest existing savages, has no words in his language to express such exalted ideas as justice, love, virtue, mercy; he has no such ideas in his mind, and cannot comprehend them. The vesicular neurine which should embody them in its constitution and manifest them in its function has not been developed in his covolutions; he is as incapable therefore of the higher mental displays of abstract reasoning and moral feeling as an idiot is, and for a like reason. Indeed, were we to imagine a person born in this country, at this time, with a brain of no higher developme[illegible] the brain of an Austrailian sa[illegible] or a Bushman, it is perfectly cert[illegible] that he would be more or less of [illegible] imbecile."

The following table is compiled from Dr. Thurman's paper "On the weight of the human brain," in the Journal of Mental Science, April, 1866.

It may be proper to add that the average weight of the adult male brain is ten per cent. greater than that of the female—100 : 90. The brains of the Hottentot, Bushman, and Australian are, so far as observation goes, of less weight than those of negroes. These facts and figures show that mental power depends upon cerebral development. To set forth the essential unity of body and mind has been a chief object of Dr. Maudsley's lectures. Against the speculations of the metaphysician, he opposes the stern logic of facts. To the unfounded assertion that mind is a separate and independent entity he shows that when a shock imparted to the mind through the senses causes a violent emotion, it produces a real commotion in the molecules of the brain. It is not that flashes inward and mysteriously affects an intangible metaphysical entity; but that an impression made on the sense is conveyed along nervous paths of communication, and produces a definite physical effect in physically-constituted mind-centers.... To reckon the highest operations of mind to be functions of a mental organization is to exalt, not to degrade, our own conception of creative power and skill.... I know not why the Power which created matter and its properties should be thought not to have endowed it with the functions of reason, feeling, and will, seeing that, whether we discover it to be so endowed or not, the mystery is equally incomprehensible to us, equally simple and easy to the Power which created matter and its properties.... By rightly submitting the understanding to facts, it is made evident that, on the one hand, matter rises in dignity and function until its energies merge insensibly into functions which are described as mental, and, on the other hand, that there are gradations of mental function, the lowest of which confessedly do not transcend the functions of matter. The burden of proving that the

of a spiritual entity intervenes somewhere, and where it intervenes, clearly lies upon those who make the assertion who need the hypothesis."

In an appendix devoted to the consideration of the limits of philosophical inquiry and the theory of vitality, Dr. Maudsley has given two of the finest essays ever written on the subjects named. In 1868 the Archbishop of York delivered an address to the members of the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution. This address which contained a violent and unreasonable attack upon materialism was published under the title of: The Limits of Philosophical Inquiry. Dr. Maudsley has reviewed the Archbishop in the most masterly manner. His defence of materialism, at once fair, manly, and conclusive, has provoked much hostile criticism, but no spiritualist has been able to show that his positions are untenable. In reviewing the Archbishop of York our author treats the subject of materialism, from a theological as well as from a scientific stand-point.

It might be well if

who inveigh so fiercely against materialism as subversive of true religious faith, would read and candidly consider Dr. Maudsley's admirable essay.

Speaking of a common but most mischievous assumption concerning materialism which had been put forward with a great show of confidence by the Archbishop, he very truly says:

"Another error, or rather set of errors into which the Archbishop plunges, is that he assumes positive science to be materialistic, and materialism to involve the negation of God, of immortality, and of free will. This imputation of materialism which ought never to have been so lightly made, it is quite certain that the majority of scientific men would earnestly disclaim.

Moreover, the materialist, as such, is not under any logical constraint whatever to deny either the existence of a God, or the

or free will. One is almost tempted to say that in two things the Archbishop distances competition: first, in the facility with which he loses or dispenses with the links of his own chain of reasoning; and secondly, in his inability to perceive, when looking sincerely with all his might, real and essential distinctions, which are not broadly, and almost coarsely, marked. If the edge of a distinction be fine, if it be not blunt as a weaver's beam, it fails seemingly to attract his attention. Whosoever believes sincerely in the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, as taught by the Apostle Paul, which all Christains profess to do, must surely have some difficulty in conceiving the immortality of the soul apart from that of the body; for if the Apostle's preaching and the Christain's faith be not vain, and the body do rise again, then it may be presumed that the soul and it will share a common immortality. So far, then, from materialism being the negation of immortality, the greatest of the Apostles, the great Apostle of the Gentiles, earnestly preached materialism as essential to the life which is to come. There is as little or less justification for saying that materialism involves of necessity the denial of free will. The facts on which the doctrine of free will is based, are the same facts of observation, whether be the accepted faith, and the question of their interpretation is not essentially connected with the one or the other faith; the spiritualists may consistently deny, and the materialist consistently advocate, free will. In like manner, the belief in the existence of God is nowise inconsistent with the most extreme materialism, for the belief is quite independent of the facts and reason on which that fact is founded. The spiritualist may deny God the power to make matter think, but the materialist need not deny the existence of God, because he holds that matter may be capable of thought. Multitudes may logically believe that mind is inseparable from body in life or death—that it is born with it, grows, ripens, decays and dies with it, without disbelieving in a great and intelligent Power who has called man into being, and ordained the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night.

* What an unnecessary horror hangs over the word materialism! It has an ugly sound, and an indefinite meaning and is well suited, therefore, to be set up as a sort of moral scare-crow; but if it be closely examined, it will be found to have the semblance of something terrible, and to be empty of any real harm. In the assertion that mind is altogether a

there is no more actual irreverence than in asserting that matter is the realization of mind; the one and the other proposition being epually meaningless so far as they postulate a knowledge of anything more than phenomena. Whether extension be visible thought, or thought invisible extension, is a choice of words, and not a choice of conceptions. To those who cannot conceive that any organization of matter, however complex, should be capable of such exalted functions as those which are called mental, is it really more conceivable that any organization of matter can be the mechanical instrument of the complex manifestations of an immaterial mind? Is it not as easy for an omnipotent Power to endow matter with mental functions as it is to create an immaterial entity capable of accomplishing them through matter? Is the Creator's arm shortened, so that he cannot endow matter with sensation and ideation? It is strangely overlooked by many who write on this matter, that the brain is not a dead instrument, but a living organ, with functions of a higher kind than those of any other bodily organ, inasmuch as its organic nature and those of any other organ. What, then, are those functions, if they are not mental? No one thinks it necessary to assume an immaterial liver behind the hepatic structure, in order to account for its functions. But so far as the nature of nerve and the complex structure of the cerebral convolutions exceed in dignity the hepatic elements and structure, so far must the material functions of the brain exceed those of the liver.

Trace the gradual development of the nervous system through the animal series, from its first germ to its most complex evolution, and let it be declared at what point it suddenly loses all its inherent properties as a living structure, and becomes the mere mechanical instrument of a spiritual entity. In what animal, or in what class of animals, does the immaterial principle abruptly intervene and supersede the agency of matter, becoming the entirely distinct cause of a similar, though more exalted order of mental phenomena?" Immaterialists would do well to answer these pertinent questions, instead of contenting themselves with a repetition of the stale and illogical arguments which form the common stock of all spiritualists, the Archbishop of York not excepted.—J. H. Whitmore in Bible Banner.

Beginning to Understand Him.

My old friend, George Storrs, did not long positively deny the resurrection of the dead. He was very confident that there would none be raised but the saints of God. He could not see any necessity or justice in resurrecting [illegible] human being who died out of Cl[illegible]t. He still says he believes in the non-resurrection of the wicked. But who are the wicked according to his views? He says on p. 17 of his pamphlet:

"Whoever has this gospel proclaimed to them and rejects the message and its requirements, has then the character properly denominated wicked, [illegible] dying in that state, 'shall not see life'—will live no more forever."

That this class is comparatively very few he proves on p. 48. After saying that no very large number even in Christendom ever heard the true gospel as it came from Christ and his apostles, but on the the contrary only a corrupted message, he says:

"There is but one sin known in the gospel which excludes men from life; that is, unbelief, or a rejection of God's message of love and life, attended by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. That the gospel is corrupted and is not preached as Christ commissioned his disciples to preach it, needs no other proof, in these days, than the fact that very few are found who preach it 'with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.' This work is to be renewed in the ages to come."

Here, then, we clearly see that there can be but very few wicked people in our day; yes, and but very few since the days of the apostles. As the pure gospel has not been preached to the world, except by very few preachers, it would be unjust to damn men for not believing a false or corrupted message preached by the many. And if it can be shown that no man since the days of the apostles, not even Mr. Storrs himself, has preached the gospel with the "Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," then the conclusion is inevitable that there have been no wicked people, no wilful rejectors of the gospel since the apostles' times.

It is simply absurd for any man to claim to preach the gospel "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." That was an apostolic gift, and all we are required to do is to RE-PREACH what the inspired apostles preached.

EVERY CREATURE.

My good brother, whose sincerity is undoubted, in the second chapter of his pamphlet defines "every creature," "all the families of the earth," "all people," to mean every individual of the human family, past, present, and future, and therefore applies the oath and promise of God to Abraham accordingly. He says that "all must be blessed with the knowledge of God'slove to them, and so have a chance to believe the good news." There seems to be no question in his mind, from his quotations and explanations of the above phrases, that the covenant to Abraham embraces all men in every age. Indeed, to prove this is the very object for which he wrote the pamphlet in question. If the promise is limited to every one who has had, or will have the faith of Abraham, or who are in his Seed—Christ—then there is no difference between us; and hence his pamphlet is useless,—for it would prove nothing but what all Christians, except Universalists, admit.

But in the first paragraph of the fourth chapter he talks differently. He is by no means positive that he is right in the application of the Abrahamic covenant. Hear him:

"We are not disposed to be too positive as to its covering all who have lived and died without the knowledge of God's merciful provision for their eternal life; yet we are inclined to the idea that it does."

After all, then, it is a [illegible] matter of opinion that the [illegible] covers all mankind who have [illegible] died in ignorance of the gospel! The most that he can be sure of is, that it it very doubtful. He is inclined to the idea, however, that it does. The matter being thus unsettled in his own mind, why all this ado about the promise and oath of God to Abraham? Why make a hobby of a matter of opinion?

Advent.

THE FIRST AND SECOND COMING.

He came not with his heavenly crown, his sceptre clad with power;
His coming was in feebleness, the infant of the hour;
An humble manger cradled, first, the virgin's holy birth,
And lowing herds compassioned there the Lord of heaven and earth.

He came not in his robe of wrath, with arm out-stretched to slay;
But on the darkling paths of earth to pour celestial day,
To guide in peace the wandering feet, the broken heart to bind,
And bear upon the painful cross the sins of human kind.

And thou hast borne them, Savior meek! and, therefore, unto thee,
In humbleness and gratitude, our hearts shall offered be;
And greenly, as the festal bough that on the altar lies,
Our souls, our bodies, all be thine, a living sacrifice!

Yet once again thy sign shall be upon the heavens displayed,
And earth and its inhabitants be terribly afraid;
For not in weakness clad thou com'st, our woes, our sins to bear,
But girt with all thy father's might, his vengeance to declare.

The terrors of that awful day, oh! who shall understand?
Or who abide, when thou in wrath shall lift thy holy hand?
The earth shall quake, the sea shall roar, the sun in heaven grow pale;
But thou hast sworn, and will not change, thy faithful will not fail.

Then grant us Savior, so to pass our time in trembling here,
That when, upon the clouds of heaven thy glory shall appear,
Uplifting high our joyful heads, in triumph we may rise,
And enter with thine angel-train, thy temple the skies!

Holiness: What is it?

I feel while many are honestly trying to inspire the church with new zeal to become holy, they will put out smaller lights that never can attain to what some claim to be the standard, or what some think they must attain to in order to be saved. The difficulty lies in defining the position, as some will be thrown over the mark as far as they consider others back of coming up to it. Forty-one years ago our Methodist church had set meetings to pray for holiness. Some would profess to get it, and, no doubt, got all they needed for the time. Others prayed for weeks, and never got what the former class told them they had, and what they could have if they did not ask amiss. Such strange expressions and high state of religious enjoyment put others back, so that put few dare attend the holiness meetings, so called. And a decension soon followed in the church, and many were discouraged, which need not have been if the thing had been properly defined or understood, by taking into the account the different dispositions or temperment of mind, experience and circumstances, etc.

I recollect an old man, a diligent seeker ofter this great blessing some others, he believed, had obtained. And he tried, and cried, and prayed; but gave up that he could not get any further than "a justified state" as it was then called. But the blessing of holiness was far ahead of being justified by faith and works. At least it was so represented. This man finally came to the wise conclusion, that if he could not come up to that high standard claimed by others, he would not do as some did—give up entirely,—but "would be a second class Christian," as he styled it. He attended meetings, helped support all the institutions of the church, and felt justified, and under no condemnation, but was not sanctified, or wholly consecrated, as others made him believe they were. He felt poor every time he prayed, and told God of his poverty, while some others had great joy and to spare. Yet he held on to his "second class religion."

In a few years those the most peaked in their denunciations against the second class were, all but two or three, without any religion at all. Some denounced the Bible, and went overboard; yet this man lived, and died in triumph, leaving this testimony: God gives grace according to our day; and dying grace when it is needed. The thorn in his flesh, or an ugly wife and his quick temper did not hinder him from enjoying "a second class religion."

I am satisfied that circumstance and temperament of mind will prevent some people, and good people too, from coming up to a level in enjoyment with others, even the individual Christian does not always feel alike. None will doubt this but a fanatic. It is a known fact ten dollars will make some people more boisterously happy than one hundred will others. It is measurably so in religious matters. Some are susceptible of more joy or sorrow under the same circumstances than others. Paul says he dare not use other men's measure. He says it is not wise to do so.

Now I do not write this to lower the standard of Christianity, but to save if possible some weak ones under peculiar trial, from throwing themselves among, or giving up as others have done. All cannot be rich in this world's goods, even with equal chances. Neither can all come up to the same standard of knowledge and education in the same school. It is so in the school of Christ. It cannot be otherwise, with our different constitutions and abilities. There are different classes in every department of life. Let every one see that he is under grace, ready to do duty when made plain. God will not judge us for not getting one hundred bushels to the acre in harvest if the ground is not capable of such crop. And if we have to put up with the "second class religion" we may and ought to feel reconciled to God and his providences, and satisfied with his promises, so we can lie down at night feeling no condemnation, but a calm resting in God, though without the ecstasy of joy some others profess.

This I have felt for months past, yet I dare not say I am as holy as God is holy—as the standard is now being raised. Without defining properly, it will certainly work injury to the second class, though not so designed by the first class. We hope they will write and define more fully what they mean by holiness: whether it is any thing more than to do as well as we can under our different circumstances, and feel the joy of God's salvation daily, and love not the world in its spirit, but Jesus' coming the best of all. We shall not be judged by how we feel, or how we die—whether in the hospital or palace—but by what we have desired to do. Even if we have not done all right, evil being present with us, through grace we shall be saved, which is the gift of God. And what we lack God will aid at the revelation of Jesus Christ. So he says, and so I believe.

If some are in "the second class," and run away from school because some are better scholars than we are, but press on, and make the little we have go as far as we can; and like the man referred to, we may have something in the harvest. All that have this hope in them will show it, and will live in this world as strangers, not mixing up with the political strife of these last days. Such as do, have not the real hope. God is allowing the agents of the devil to preach to us a sermon on the vanity of having riches, and fine houses, and other things. Fire will consume them soon, and us with them, unless we are ready to be caught up, away from it. The Lord help the strong to bear the infirmities of the weak. While you eat strong meat, others cannot do so.

HIRAM MUNGER.

A Wail of Despair.

In the Christian Standard of Sept. 16, I find a letter from the pen of Eld. B. U. Watkins, of the Christian church, in regard to a discussion at Thomas Fork, Meig County, Ohio, between a Mr. Scott and a Mr. Harvey, on the kingdom. Mr. Harvey affirmed that "Christ's kingdom was established the first Pentecost after his resurrection," which Mr. Scott denied. From the reading of Mr. Watkins' letter, one would naturally infer that Mr. Scott is an Adventist, but the following wail is conclusive:

> "The terrible declaration that man has NO soul, and Christ NO kingdom, has yet to be met. The question is pushed upon us. It is too revolting to be sought after; but, as a painful duty, we must accept the question and overthrow its pretentions, and expose its skepticism."

The emphasis is Mr. Watkins'. Observe, he says, "the question has yet to be met." And how does Mr. Watkins propose to meet it? Why, by attributing to us, "the terrible declaration that man has NO soul!" When men have to resort to downright misrepresentation to sustain a theory, it should be accepted as evidence that the theory is false. Who ever heard an intelligent Adventist assert that "man has NO soul?" True, Adventists deny the natural immortality of the soul; but is that equivalent to affirming that man has NO soul at all? Certainly not. Upon the same principle I might affirm that Mr. A. has no horse, because his horse is not a white horse!

The reader need scarcely be told that Mr. Watkins knows better than to attribute this sentiment to us. In an article from his pen, published in the Standard of Sept. 15, 1866, I find the following remarkable declaration: "If we are to depend upon the classic use of the word pneuma,[1] we might be easily driven to the wall in our attempt to prove a deathless nature in man." Verily, Mr. Watkins progresses in meeting "the terrible declaration that man has NO soul!" Try again, Mr. Watkins! G. W. GREEN.

Longing.

"I am sick of love;" my soul fainteth for his long delay. "Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or a young hart, upon the mountains of spices." (Cant. 8: 14)

"Bridegroom of the weeping spouse,
Listen to her longing vows;
Listen to her widowed moan;
Listen to creation's groan.
Bid, O, bid thy trumpet sound,
Gather thine elect around,
Gird with saints thy flaming car,
Summon them from climes afar,
Call them from life's cheerless gloom,
Call them from the marble tomb;
From the grass-grown village grave,
From the deep dissolving wave,
From the whirlwind and the flame,
Mighty Head, thy members claim."

These first breathings of the espoused church, from the gifted Charlotte Elizabeth, are the best expression of my longing soul in view of that day. When I look upon this "groaning creation" as I feel it in myself, and see it in my husband, and in my children, and in my friends, and in the lower order of creation, I am pained in my spirit, and groan and sigh in the bitterness of my soul for the "restitution" promised at the coming of the "Spouse." "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." E. S. WILLARD.

P. S. Anew do I feel before the Lord that every trial of my life has worked for my good; therefore do I praise God in my heart more for the bitter than for the sweet of my life, for it is a greater test of his loving heart to men. "O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done,"—is a safe position for the soul. E. S. W.

Signs of an Impending Conflict Between Austria and Russia.

To a great degree Austria, during the past five years, has followed a policy of non-intervention. With Andrassy's accession to office this policy will cease. To maintain it would be directly opposed to his temper and character. The Germans and Hungarians form very different estimates of Andrassy's character; the former have always considered him a crafty, rather unscrupulous, ambitious man; the latter maintain that his most prominent qualities are restless energy, self-confidence, and determination. The two estimates are not directly antagonistic on any point, and they agree in depicting a man not likely to be tied down by precedents or guided by other people's views. It is principally to Count Andrassy's nomination as Minister of foreign affairs that I ascribe the sudden belief in the possibility of a Russian war. Doubtless this belief is based on other grounds also; but the subject would not have attracted the attention and importance now attached to it if Beust had remained in office. Since 1866 I have not heard the probability of a war with Russia so openly and freely discussed in Vienna, not in clubs and society only, but in the Government offices. The disastrous Bohemian campaign taught the Austrians that modern wars cannot be brought to a successful issue without long and arduous preparation; the chiefs of the army learned on that occasion, that guns, rifles, and ammunition cannot be obtained from empty arsenals, nor clothing and other supplies from exhausted depots; and they learned by experience that horses admirably adapted for drawing plows or country carts, made but indifferent cavalry chargers, even with a fortnight's drill. Consequently, ever since the seven weeks' war steady and quiet preparations have been going on in all the military departments. Accumulations of warlike stores have been gradually made, and all needed alterations and prpearations, which required no great outlay of money, have been carefully conducted. These preparations received a stimulus at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war, when it was discovered that, notwithstanding all that had been done, the army was really quite unprepared for a campaign; and that a special loan, at an excessive rate of interest, must be contracted in order to obtain hastily, and consequently on unfavorable terms, the stores and equipments which would be needed at once, if instead of being localized, the war became a general one.

When it became evident that the war would not spread beyond the frontiers of the two countries engaged, the necessity for immediate readiness ceased, and the efforts relaxed. But notwithstanding, the steady preparations, which had continued from Sadowa to Sedan, were persevered in to the full extent that the funds set aside for military purposes would allow. If the preparations for an early war with Russia were merely the subject of private conversation here—if they were mere makers of gossip or of press reports—I would not attach such importance to them. An Austro-Russian war has so long been prophesied as one of the certainties of the future, in this capital; the topic is so useful to editors in the dull season, and speculators on the Bourse, and so frequently resorted to by both parties that I would not mention the subject here if I had not learned positively that preparations are actually pushed on. For instance, I have learned on undoubted authority that two contracts which the government had made for warlike stores—one contract is for mitrailleuses—have been considerably modified. By the terms of the contracts as they were originally made the government had the right to shorten the time within which the articles were to be delivered, on condition of paying an increased price for the articles contracted for. This condition has been enforced and the delivery is to be made in March instead of September of next year. Now, as Austria is not precisely overflowing with surplus funds, as the contracts in both instances are for matarial which is absolutely useless except for purposes of war and as the country has hitherto been satisfied to make its preparations and collect its stores as economically as possible, merely using for that purpose surplus funds, I am inclined to believe this sudden deviation to ways of extravagance is indicative of the belief in certain quarters that these stores and material may be needed sooner than was originally anticipated.

The public doubtless founds its belief in an early war chiefly on Count Andrassy's nomination as Minister of Foreign Affairs, for it has always been an article of faith with Austrians that Beust's succession by Andrassy, who is avowedly the Austrian statesman best acquainted with the policy and designs of the Czar and his ministers, would be indicative of serious complications with Russia. Many reasons, good or bad, tend to increase the belief here that Russia, especially since the defeat of France, a year ago, has been busily preparing for a formidable campaign. Count Nooikopp's sudden recall to St. Petersburg, presumably to confer with the Czar on the object and effect of Andrassy's nomination; the unsettled state of France; the ill feeling which exists in Italy against that country, and which may bring about innumerable complications; the recent troubles in Croatia and the military frontier, which are alledged to have been caused by Russian agents; and even the visit of the hereditary Grand Duke to America, are looked upon here as sources of uneasiness. The report that Servia has contracted an alliance with Russia; that the latter country has furnished the principality with money and guns; and that the Czar has just received the Servian Prince with marked and significant attention, also serves to excite a little anxiety and to foster the belief that a great change is to be made in the foreign policy of the country.—Vienna Correspondent N. Y. Times.

Cuba.

While the authorities at Havana are asking us to believe that three thousand of the most influential insurgents have united in humble protestation of sorrow for their rebellion, gratitude for the restoration of Spanish rule, and admiration of the soldierly virtues of Valmaseda, we have a terrible description of what the Spanish rule really is, from the pen of a lady who passed two years within the insurgent lines. Mrs. Luaces tells the awful story with an earnest simplicity more impressive than passionate denunciation. Accustomed as we are to narratives of barbarity in Cuba, this picture of the massacre of women, children, and helpless invalids is enough to make us stand aghast. Savages never showed more barbarity than the Volunteers of the unfortunate island. The pioneers of the Indian wilderness never suffered worse tortures than the wretched non-combatants whom Spanish soldiers found within the insurgent lines. Men were bayoneted and hacked to death under the eyes of their wives and children. Prisoners were butchered to save the trouble of transportation. In one place seven women and five children were decapitated. In another a woman was chopped to pieces with her new-born child. Four men who had taken no part in the insurrection were crucified, wearing crowns of thorns. A young man dying of consumption was carried out of the house in a chair and shot through the head, the bullet entering the body of his mother. He was the last of five brothers, all massacred by the Volunteers. Two ladies, with four children, were cut to pieces, and a fifth child, two years of age, was thrown alive into their burning house. A young lady, suspected of carrying letters to the insurgents, was first searched and then ordered to pass in review before the Governor of Puerto Principe and a number of his officers, with nothing on her person but a single undergarment.

For outrages such as these—and they are only specimens of a long series—there is no forgiveness. The Volunteers may crush out the insurrection, but it will only be by making the insurgent district a desert, and putting the whole patriot population to the sword. If peace ever should be built upon the foundation of these villainies, it would be a shame and a misfortune to the civilized world. Humanity blushes that such deeds should be done under the flag of a power which calls itself one of the family of nations; and the question day after recurs, whether it may not be the duty of Christendom to interfere and stop a butchery which is not war, but murder. We cannot stand idly by while a fair island is overrun by barbarism. There is a point at which it may be our moral obligation to stay the murderers' hand. Has not the time almost come?—*N. Y. The Attractions of the Closet.

Beauty is fading, health and friends uncertain, wealth precarious, and all things else of an earthly character stamped with blight and decay. But amidst all the wreck of our earthly hopes, the disappointment of dearest and most fondly cherished prospects, one pearl of infinitely great price has been spared to cheer the gloom of our earthly journey. And this is the closet; the place where we may bow alone with God. The sacredness and solitude of its quiet retreat has comforted and made happy the pathway of millions upon millions in their onward march through the wilderness of this world. All are strangers to real and true happiness who have not learned the power of its attractions.

Nothing, however great in value, brilliant or magnificent, can form a substitute, or approach to an equivalent for the joy and peace found in the sacred enclosure of the closet. It was the delight of the ancient worthies since the world began. Isaac of old in whose seed all the world should be blest, in the quietude of eventide sought the open field where he could walk alone and commune with God. Jacob, though a wanderer from his father's house, in the loneliness of his journey to Padan Aram—ascended his night-long prayer, while angels were sent to be his companions, and he was able to inscribe on the place—"The house of God and the gate of heaven," in remembrance of the Bethel he there enjoyed. Peter, the humbled and courageous disciple, retired to the airy roof of his sea-side lodging to hold noon-day communion with his blessed Redeemer, where the messengers of Cornelius found him. And Saul also, (afterwards Paul) as he lay in blindness in the house of Judas, in his new-born penitence poured out his soul in earnest prayer, in answer to which Annanias was sent with words of cheer and could call him "brother."

"The Man of sorrows," too, our blessed Savior, wrestled in agonizing prayer all night to God. The starry canopy above and the silent earth beneath witnessed his fervent pleading for strength to bear the sins of a guilty world in his own body on the painful cross. Nor were his prayers in vain, as are not those of all his sincere followers, for in that dread hour of mortal agony, angels were sent to minister to him and strengthen him for the great conflict before him, and he was enabled to say—"Thy will, not mine be done!" And this being the hightest point of Christian excellence, his prayer was heard; the struggle endured, and the victory won. What an example for imitation left behind by our suffering Lord for his children to follow. No matter how severe our conflicts, how heavy our trials, the battle is not won nor the victory obtained until we are all able to say with our blessed Savior, thy will be done.

And this will always be the result of continued fervent prayer. Where is the child of sorrow whose heart has not been made to beat quicker with joy and gladness, as he has made a deposit of his heavy and bitter load of grief? The prison has lost its gloom, the sick-bed its weariness and distress; indigence, want and misery all have at times changed their garb of poverty for the bright robe of hope and cheerful submission under the ponderous weight of life's checquered pathway. And this gracious privilege of prayer is one among the prominent blessings of the Christian that will accompany him all through life's journey; filling his heart with joy and gladness, enabling him to look forward with delight to the time appointed when his Lord shall come with the long-promised mansions to bestow upon his waiting children the gift of eternal life and a glorious immortality with all the redeemed. Then, as disciples of Christ, let us continue to pray, ever and always, in the closet, the family, the social circle of the sanctuary, living lives of continued devotion and prayer, ready to hail our blessed Redeemer when he shall come with all the holy angels. And if we "fall on sleep," our flesh shall rest in hope, for Jesus will redeem us from the power of the grave. And if we are alive and looking for his appearing, we shall be able to say, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us."

To Smoke or Not to Smoke.

The use of tobacco is an evil, or it is not an evil. In the enormous and increasing consumption of this plant it has become a question of very great importance what effect upon the general standard of health is produced by it. The agitation of this subject has been increased during the last two years, and pamphlets, essays, and lectures have developed in full strength the arguments for and against tobacco using. As smoking is the most popular and most powerful method by which the stimulant effect of the plant is obtained, it is principally upon this habit that the battle is waged.

We have from time to time presented some of the arguments on both sides of the question, our object being to assist in arriving at truth in so important a matter; and though our confirmed taste for smoking and the natural desire to find it a harmless practice have led us to peruse, with peculiar care, all that has been said in its favor, we avow that neither reading nor experience has convinced us that the general use of tobacco is other than an unmitigated evil.

The Dublin University Magazine for September of the present year contains by far the most comprehensive review of the subject that has met our notice, and it is the purpose of this article to place some of the facts, stated in this paper and gleaned from the experience and observation of a very large number of eminent physiologists and pathologists, before the American public in a more prominent manner than they would otherwise appear.

Every page of this remarkable paper is so replete with references that from it might almost be compiled a bibliography of the history, uses, and abuses of "the weed."

The first thing that forces itself upon our attention is the enormous consumption of tobacco. The Food Journal states that as much money is spent upon tobacco in England as upon daily bread, yet England undoubtedly consumes less of this narcotic, in proportion to its population, than Germany or the United States. The consumption in England has very nearly doubled in twenty years. The annual consumption in Asia, Europe, America, and Australia, as computed by the eminent German statistician, Ausland from the most reliable data obtainable, is not less than 970,000,000 pounds. This affords food for comment, but we will confine ourselves to facts and authorities.

M. Barral, who made the official report on specimens of tobacco exhibited at the Paris Exposition, in his surprise at the footings of his estimates of annual production, remarks: "The enormous figures which have passed before the reader's eye testify to the facility with which people fall into excessive expense for the gratification of a pleasure which has for its principal aim to kill time and to stupefy the mind."

The active principles of tobacco are nicotine, a concrete oil called tobacco camphor, and an empyreumatic oil. The two last are active poisons, but not so deadly as the first, which according to Taylor, is one of the most virulent poisons known. One drop of it kills a rabbit in three minutes and a half. We need not quote other authorities on this point, as all agree with Taylor as to the character of these substances.

The disease called locomotorataxy, which is a general paralysis of the nerves, is a disease that was unknown forty years ago. Now it has become quite common. Martin ascribes its origin and prevalence to the use of tobacco.

Dr. Richardson, himself a smoker, says: "Smoking produces disturbances—(a) in the blood, causing undue fluidity, and change in the red corpuscles; (b) in the stomach, giving rise to debility, nausea, and, in extreme cases, sickness; (c) on the heart, producing debility of that organ and irregular action; (d) on the organs of sense, causing, in the extreme degree, dilatation of the pupils of the eye, confusion of vision, bright lines, luminous or cobweb specks, and long retention of images on the retina; with other and analogous symptoms affecting the ear, namely, inability clearly to define sounds, and the annoyance of a sharp, ringing sound, like a whistle or a bell; (e) on the brain, suspending the waste of that organ, and oppressing it if it be duly nourished, but soothing it if it be exhausted; (f) on the nervous filaments and sympathetic or organic nerves, leading to deficient power in them, and to over secretion in those surfaces — glands — over which the nerves exert a controlling force; (g) on the mucous membrane of the mouth, causing enlargment and soreness of the tonsils—smoker's sore throat—redness, dryness, and occasional peeling off of the membrane, and either unnatural firmness and contraction, or sponginess of the gums; (h) on the bronchial surface of the lungs when that is already irritable, sustaining the irritation and increasing the cough."

This authority, however, claims that the diseases caused by tobacco are functional, not organic or specific. This does not matter much, except as encouragement to those who desire to recover from ill health resulting from smoking.

M. Decaisne recognizes a functional disease of the heart (narcotism of the heart) as caused by tobacco, distinct symptoms of which were observed by him in twenty-seven out of thirty-eight boys, aged from nine to fifteen, who smoked more or less.

M. Beau notices eight cases of angina pectoris caused by the use of tobacco.

Professor Lizars records several cases of cancer of the tongue and lips caused by the use of the pipe. The writer has known one such instance, and never wishes to see another example of such terrible suffering resulting from a worse than useless habit.

Dr. Taylor says those who suffer from functional disorders are ready "to attribute the derangements to any other cause than a real one."

Experiments made by Dr. Druhan seem to indicate that tobacco poison in an overdose may produce effects which render even small doses dangerous ever after.

Dr. Corson corroborates the opinion of M. Beau as to angina pectoris.

But we will make no further citations. If tobacco has any applications useful to mankind we are satisfied that smoking, chewing, and snuffing are not of them. We may use tobacco to kill the insects which infest our rose-bushes and conservatories; but, if we will continue to poison ourselves with it, let us make no pretences about it. We do it to gratify a depraved appetite from which we are irresolute to break loose. Let us neither belive nor pretend to believe that it is a blessing. If tobacco poisons our bodies, let it not also corrupt our morals and make hypocrites of us.—Scientific American.

Our King.

The church of Christ are favored with an unchangeable priesthood. The High Priest is Jesus, once known as the man of Nazareth. In his humiliation he was our prophet. In his exaltation he is our priest. In his future work he will be our king. The seers of old declared him. The prophets dwelt with delight upon the greatness of the prophet God should raise up unto his people. His name was Jesus. He was called the Son of man—the Son of God. He said to Mary: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" On another occasion he said: "The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." We see then, that as a prophet he worked understandingly. He was the Son of God. In this work, he testifies, "I and my Father are one." Consider his dignity even in humility. How God-like are all his ways!

But he does not remain on earth, "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," for God highly exalted him. He now sits at the right hand of the Father on his throne. There he is [to remain till probation closes. He is still moved by the complaints of suffering mortals, for he has not forgotten the the wilderness, nor the power of Satan to tempt frail humanity. He is a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God. He sits upon the throne of grace, and will continue there till the time arrives for the revelation of our king.

How glorious will be his advent! Earth will smile in gladness when he comes, and the desert will rejoice and blossom as the rose. Splendor, in comparison with which all earthly pomp fades and dwindles into insignificance, will be witnessed by all who behold him in his glory. He then shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and the saved ones will hail him as OUR KING.

Jesus to obtain all this glory, suffered on the tree. "For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross." But he is no sufferer now. Now we are in our trial state, but soon we shall be glorified. What an incentive to action! How glorious the prospect! "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Oh! let us wash and be clean, that when our king shall come he may cloth us with incorruptible garments, and permit us to sit on his throne with him. Let us always be ready to say to our king as did the seer of Patmos—"Come, Lord Jesus!"

As daylight can be seen through very small holes, so little things will illustrate a person's character.

The Attractions of the Closet.

Beauty is fading, health and friends uncertain, wealth precarious, and all things else of an earthly character stamped with blight and decay. But amidst all the wreck of our earthly hopes, the disappointment of dearest and most fondly cherished prospects, one pearl of infinitely great price has been spared to cheer the gloom of our earthly journey. And th[illegible] the closet; the place where we may bow alone with God. The sacredness and solitude of its quiet retreat has comforted and made happy the pathway of millions upon millions in their onward march through the wilderness of this world. All are strangers to real and true happiness who have not learned the power of its attractions.

Nothing, however great in value, brilliant or magnificent, can form a substitute, or approach to an equivalent for the joy and peace found in the sacred enclosure of the closet. It was the delight of the ancient worthies since the world began. Isaac of old in whose seed all the world should be blest, in the quietude of eventide sought the open field where he could walk alone and commune with God. Jacob, though a wanderer from his father's house, in the loneliness of his journey to Padan Aram—ascended his night-long prayer, while angels were sent to be his companions, and he was able to inscribe on the place—"The house of God and the gate of heaven," in remembrance of the Bethel he there enjoyed. Peter, the humbled and courageous disciple, retired to the airy roof of his sea-side lodging to hold noon-day communion with his blessed Redeemer, where the messengers of Cornelius found him. And Saul also, (afterwards Paul) as he lay in blindness in the house of Judas, in his new-born penitence poured out his soul in earnest prayer, in answer to which Annanias was sent with words of cheer and could call him "brother."

"The Man of sorrows," too, our blessed Savior, wrestled in agonizing prayer all night to God. The starry canopy above and the silent earth beneath witnessed his fervent pleading for strength to bear the sins of a guilty world in his own body on the painful cross. Nor were his prayers in vain, as are not those of all his sincere followers, for in that dread hour of mortal agony, angels were sent to minister to him and strengthen him for the great conflict before him, and he was enabled to say—"Thy will, not mine be done!" And this being the hightest point of Christian excellence, his prayer was heard; the struggle endured, and the victory won. What an example for imitation left behind by our suffering Lord for his children to follow. No matter how severe our conflicts, how heavy our trials, the battle is not won nor the victory obtained until we are all able to say with our blessed Savior, thy will be done.

And this will always be the result of continued fervent prayer. Where is the child of sorrow whose heart has not been made to beat quicker with joy and gladness, as he has made a deposit of his heavy and bitter load of grief? The prison has lost its gloom, the sick-bed its weariness and distress; indigence, want and misery all have at times changed their garb of poverty for the bright robe of hope and cheerful submission under the ponderous weight of life's chequered pathway. And this gracious privilege of prayer is one among the prominent blessings of the Christian that will accompany him all through life's journey; filling his heart with joy and gladness, enabling him to look forward with delight to the time appointed when his Lord shall come with the long-promised mansions to bestow upon his waiting children the gift of eternal life and a glorious immortality with all the redeemed. Then, as disciples of Christ, let us continue to pray, ever and always, in the closet, the family, the social circle of the sanctuary, living lives of continued devotion and prayer, ready to hail our blessed Redeemer when he shall come with all the holy angels. And if we "fall on sleep," our flesh shall rest in hope, for Jesus will redeem us from the power of the grave. And if we are alive and looking for his appearing, we shall be able to say, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us."

The Attractions of the Closet.

Beauty is fading, health and friends uncertain, wealth precarious, and all things else of an earthly character stamped with blight and decay. But amidst all the wreck of our earthly hopes, the disappointment of dearest and most fondly cherished prospects, one pearl of infinitely great price has been spared to cheer the gloom of our earthly journey. And this is the closet; the place where we may bow alone with God. The sacredness and solitude of its quiet retreat has comforted and made happy the pathway of millions upon millions in their onward march through the wilderness of this world. All are strangers to real and true happiness who have not learned the power of its attractions.

Nothing, however great in value, brilliant or magnificent, can form a substitute, or approach to an equivalent for the joy and peace found in the sacred enclosure of the closet. It was the delight of the ancient worthies since the world began. Isaac of old in whose seed all the world should be blest, in the quietude of eventide sought the open field where he could walk alone and commune with God. Jacob, though a wanderer from his father's house, in the loneliness of his journey to Padan Aram—ascended his night-long prayer, while angels were sent to be his companions, and he was able to insribe on the place—"The house of God and the gate of heaven," in remembrance of the Bethel he there enjoyed. Peter, the humbled and courageous disciple, retired to the airy roof of his sea-side lodging to hold noon-day communion with his blessed Redeemer, where the messengers of Cornelius found him. And Saul also, (afterwards Paul) as he lay in blindness in the house of Judas, in his new-born penitence poured out his soul in earnest prayer, in answer to which Annanias was sent with words of cheer and could call him "brother."

"The Man of sorrows," too, our blessed Savior, wrestled in agonizing prayer all night to God. The starry canopy above and the silent earth beneath witnessed his fervent pleading for strength to bear the sins of a guilty world in his own body on the painful cross. Nor were his prayers in vain, as are not those of all his sincere followers, for in that dread hour of mortal agony, angels were sent to minister to him and strengthen him for the great conflict before him, and he was enabled to say—"Thy will, not mine be done!" And this being the hightest point of Christian excellence, his prayer was heard; the struggle endured, and the victory won. What an example for imitation left behind by our suffering Lord for his children to follow. No matter how severe our conflicts, how heavy our trials, the battle is not won nor the victory obtained until we are all able to say with our blessed Savior, thy will be done.

And this will always be the result of continued fervent prayer. Where is the child of sorrow whose heart has not been made to beat quicker with joy and gladness, as he has made a deposit of his heavy and bitter load of grief? The prison has lost its gloom, the sick-bed its weariness and distress; indigence, want and misery all have at times changed their garb of poverty for the bright robe of hope and cheerful submission under the ponderous weight of life's chequered pathway. And this gracious privilege of prayer is one among the prominent blessings of the Christian that will accompany him all through life's journey; filling his heart with joy and gladness, enabling him to look forward with delight to the time appointed when his Lord shall come with the long-promised mansions to bestow upon his waiting children the gift of eternal life and a glorious immortality with all the redeemed. Then, as disciples of Christ, let us continue to pray, ever and always, in the closet, the family, the social circle of the sanctuary, living lives of continued devotion and prayer, ready to hail our blessed Redeemer when he shall come with all the holy angels. And if we "fall on sleep," our flesh shall rest in hope, for Jesus will redeem us from the power of the grave. And if we are alive and looking for his appearing, we shall be able to say, "Lo this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us."

MARY A. TIBBETS.

To Smoke or Not to Smoke.

The use of tobacco is an evil, or it is not an evil. In the enormous and increasing consumption of this plant it has become a question of very great importance what effect upon the general standard of health is produced by it. The agitation of this subject has been increased during the last two years, and pamphlets, essays, and lectures have developed in full strength the arguments for and against tobacco using. As smoking is the most popular and most powerful method by which the stimulant effect of the plant is obtained, it is principally upon this habit that the battle is waged.

We have from time to time presented some of the arguments on both sides of the question, our object being to assist in arriving at truth in so important a matter; and though our confirmed taste for smoking and the natural desire to find it a harmless practice have led us to peruse, with peculiar care, all that has been said in its favor, we avow that neither reading nor experience has convinced us that the general use of tobacco is other than an unmitigated evil.

The Dublin University Magazine for September of the present year contains by far the most comprehensive review of the subject that has met our notice, and it is the purpose of this article to place some of the facts, stated in this paper and gleaned from the experience and observation of a very large number of eminent physiologists and pathologists, before the American public in a more prominent manner than they would otherwise appear.

Every page of this remarkable paper is so replete with references that from it might almost be compiled a bibliography of the history, uses, and abuses of "the weed."

The first thing that forces itself upon our attention is the enormous consumption of tobacco. The Food Journal states that as much money is spent upon tobacco in England as upon daily bread, yet England undoubtedly consumes less of this narcotic, in proportion to its population, than Germany or the United States. The consumption in England has very nearly doubled in twenty years. The annual consumption in Asia, Europe, America, and Australia, as computed by the eminent German statistician, Ausland from the most reliable data obtainable, is not less than 970,000,000 pounds. This affords food for comment, but we will confine ourselves to facts and authorities.

M. Barral, who made the official report on specimens of tobacco exhibited at the Paris Exposition, in his surprise at the footings of his estimates of annual production, remarks: "The enormous figures which have passed before the reader's eye testify to the facility with which people fall into excessive expense for the gratification of a pleasure which has for its principal aim to kill time and to stupefy the mind."

The active principles of tobacco are nicotine, a concrete oil called tobacco camphor, and an empyreumatic oil. The two last are active poisons, but not so deadly as the first, which according to Taylor, is one of the most virulent poisons known. One drop of it kills a rabbit in three minutes and a half. We need not quote other authorities on this point, as all agree with Taylor as to the character of these substances.

The disease called locomotorataxy, which is a general paralysis of the nerves, is a disease that was unknown forty years ago. Now it has become quite common. Martin ascribes its origin and prevalence to the use of tobacco.

Dr. Richardson, himself a smoker, says: "Smoking produces disturbances —(a) in the blood, causing undue fluidity, and change in the red corpuscles; (b) in the stomach, giving rise to debility, nausea, and, in extreme cases, sickness; (c) on the heart, producing debility of that organ and irregular action; (d) on the organs of sense, causing, in the extreme degree, dilatation of the pupils of the eye, confusion of vision, bright lines, luminous or cobweb specks, and long retention of images on the retina; with other and analogous symptoms affecting the ear, namely, inability clearly to define sounds, and the annoyance of a sharp, ringing sound, like a whistle or a bell; (e) on the brain, suspending the waste of that organ, and oppressing it if it be duly nourished, but soothing it if it be exhausted; (f) on the nervous filaments and sympathetic or organic nerves, leading to deficient power in them, and to over secretion in those surfaces — glands — over which the nerves exert a controlling force; (g) on the mucous membrane of the mouth, causing enlargment and soreness of the tonsils—smoker's sore throat—redness, dryness, and occasional peeling off of the membrane, and either unnatural firmness and contraction, or sponginess of the gums; (h) on the bronchial surface of the lungs when that is already irritable, sustaining the irritation and increasing the cough."

This authority, however, claims that the diseases caused by tobacco are functional, not organic or specific. This does not matter much, except as encouragement to those who desire to recover from ill health resulting from smoking.

M. Decaisne recognizes a functional disease of the heart (narcotism of the heart) as caused by tobacco, distinct symptoms of which were observed by him in twenty-seven out of thirty-eight boys, aged from nine to fifteen, who smoked more or less.

It is a fact well established that before adult age the use of tobacco produces more serious disturbance than later in life.

M. Beau notices eight cases of angina pectoris caused by the use of tobacco.

Professor Lizars records several cases of cancer of the tongue and lips caused by the use of the pipe. The writer has known one such instance, and never wishes to see another example of such terrible suffering resulting from a worse than useless habit.

Dr. Taylor says those who suffer from functional disorders are ready "to attribute the derangements to any other cause than a real one."

Experiments made by Dr. Druhan seem to indicate that tobacco poison in an overdose may produce effects which render even small doses dangerous ever after.

Dr. Corson corroborates the opinion of M. Beau as to angina pectoris.

But we will make no further citations. If tobacco has any applications useful to mankind we are satisfied that smoking, chewing, and snuffing are not of them. We may use tobacco to kill the insects which infest our rosebushes and conservatories; but, if we will continue to poison ourselves with it, let us make no pretences about it. We do it to gratify a depraved appetite from which we are irresolute to break loose. Let us neither belive nor pretend to believe that it is a blessing. If tobacco poisons our bodies, let it not also corrupt our morals and make hypocrites of us.—Scientific American.

Our King.

The church of Christ are favored with an unchangeable priesthood. The High Priest is Jesus, once known as the man of Nazareth. In his humiliation he was our prophet. In his exaltation he is our priest. In his future work he will be our king. The seers of old declared him. The prophets dwelt with delight upon the greatness of the prophet God should raise up unto his people. His name was Jesus. He was called the Son of man—the Son of God. He said to Mary: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" On another occasion he said: "The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." We see then, that as a prophet he worked understandingly. He was the Son of God. In this work, he testifies, "I and my Father are one." Consider his dignity even in humility. How God-like are all his ways!

But he does not remain on earth, "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," for God highly exalted him. He now sits at the right hand of the Father on his throne. There he is {to remain till probation closes. He is still moved by the complaints of suffering mortals, for he has not forgotten the the wilderness, nor the power of Satan to tempt frail humanity. He is a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God. He sits upon the throne of grace, and will continue there till the time arrives for the revelation of our king.

How glorious will be his advent! Earth will smile in gladness when he comes, and the desert will rejoice and blossom as the rose. Splendor, in comparison with which all earthly pomp fades and dwindles into insignificance, will be witnessed by all who behold him in his glory. He then shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and the saved ones will hail him as OUR KING.

Jesus to obtain all this glory, suffered on the tree. "For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross." But he is no sufferer now. Now we are in our trial state, but soon we shall be glorified. What an incentive to action! How glorious the prospect! "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Oh! let us wash and be clean, that when our king shall come he may cloth us with incorruptible garments, and permit us to sit on his throne with him. Let us always be ready to say to our king as did the seer of Patmos—"Come, Lord Jesus!"

NORTHERN DISTRICT Q. M.

Convened in the hall at Hesperia, Nov. 14. Preaching in the evening by Eld. J. Bower, from Prov. 11: 18—To him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward. A good beginning. On Friday met at 9 o'clock. Preaching brethren present: Elds. J. Bower, R. Burtenshaw, T. C. Grundy, E. N. Bliss, Wm. Branch, D. Weaver, and E. B. Scott.

Voted, that the committees be appointed by the chair. Wm. Branch, R. Burtenshaw, and D. Weaver were appointed a business committee. Devotional committee: D. Weaver, R. Burtenshaw, and S. Dudley. Ordination Committee: E. B. Scott, Wm. Branch.

T. C. Grandy and E. N. Bliss were presented to the Conference for membership, and their cases referred. T. C. Grundy was received as an ordained Eld. and E. N. Bliss as licenciate.

Churches received: Whitewater, Traverse Co. eleven members; Wm. Pray, Eld; presented by E. N. Bliss.

Bridgeville, Gratiot Co.; nine members.; James Sturgis, Eld. By Wm. Branch.

Wexford, Wexford Co.; twelve members; Albert Brighton Eld. By J. Bower.

Preaching at 2 o'clock p. m., by Wm. Branch, from John 6: 40—"And this is the will of him that sent me; that whosoever seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Evening, preaching by T. C. Grunday, from Heb. 1: 3—"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." It was good to be there.

SATURDAY. Reports of ministers: J. Bower since last Q. M. has been laboring in Wexford and Gratiot counties. Since the last of September have traveled over 460 miles. Organized one church of twelve members, baptized two souls. Have paid out $26 and received $13. I have rented my farm, and purpose devoting my time to the ministry as much as possible. Feel encouraged to go forward.

E. B. Scott. Since last Q. M. have been laboring at Denver, Hesperia and Leavett. A good interest in each place. Feel that I have done what I could. The day of the Lord will reveal the results. Prospect encouraging.

Wm. Branch. My labors have been confined near St. John's. Found a hard place at Bridgeville, but by the grace of God succeeded in raising up a church of nine members. Have baptised several of late. A church at St. John's of twenty-three members, and good material.

Br. R. Burtenshaw. For the last year my labors have been somewhat scattered. Have visited churches in different places; found a few faithful ones here and there. Feel like holding fast till Jesus comes.

T. C. Grunday. A year ago the Methodist Conference left me without an appointment. It was the work of an enemy, but the Lord has brought me out four times better than I was before. Praise his name. Then I did not know what Adventism was. But I accidentally came across some of these silent messengers that are doing a mighty work in the world, which set me to thinking. Finally Br. A. D. Abbott came to see me; and finding that he had changed his views in theology, I began to think there was something I had not seen. So I went with him to Hesperia to the Advent meeting, and there I found some of God's children realy enjoying the love of God in their hearts. Here Br. Weaver and Scott gave me some books and tracts, that were the means of bringing me out fully into the truth. Praise God.

Brethren, I am with you fully in this blessed hope, and by the grace of God will assist in sounding the glad tidings. I am an Adventist! I prize my Bible more highly, and read it more than ever before. Last Sunday Br. Scott led me down into the water, and I was buried in the likeness of Christ's death. The rest of my days shall be spent in my Master's service.

E. N. Bliss. I have been laboring in Traverse and Wexford counties. The Lord has blessed. I have been on my own hook. But I now feel that I am with you, and will do what I can to build up the cause and bring sinners to Christ.

The subject of sustaining the cause in this new field was discussed at some length, and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, that believing as we do that Jesus is soon to come, we as a people put forth a greater effort than hitherto to spread this glorious truth and sustain our preaching brethren in the field.

Resolved,, That we will try and do more to enlarge the circulation of our paper, THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES and thereby help the cause.

At 10 a. m., preaching by R. Burtenshaw, from Acts 2: 30. Refreshing time.

At 2 p. m., preaching by E. N. Bliss, from John 11: 25, and by J. Bower in the evening.

Sunday, preaching by E. B. Scott, T. C. Grundy, and J. Bower. At the close thirty-five sat down to the table of the Lord. This was a time long to be remembered. And thus closed one of the best meetings ever held in this district. We had respectable and attentive audiences all through, notwithstanding other denominations did what they could to keep the people away.

E. B. SCOTT.

Not many but much, is a maxim of which Rev. E. Taylor, D. D., quoted a good illustration at the Institute at cooperstown, N. Y: Now, I remember Sidney Smith said, when some one asked him what he thought of two speakers: "They remind me of the two hands of a clock, the minute-hand and the hour-hand. The minute-hand moves twelve times as fast, but the hour-hand means twelve times as much." Let us all be hour-hands.

Advent Christian Times.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 26, 1871.

THE Advance thinks it is only the enormous national debt of Europe that keep the nations from war to-morrow. Shall be have an essay upon "National Debts as a means of National Grace," or "National Indebtedness the door to the Millennium?" If running in debt will prevent war let us have the debts by all means.

GEO. MULLER, of Bristol orphan-house fame, spurs himself to duty and loving work for Jesus Christ by the Scriptual motive of the Lord's coming. He himself bears record that the question—"What may I do for the Lord before his return, as he may come soon?" included the motive that forty years ago led to the commencement of what has since proved a gigantic charity.

WHEN we are subjected to such epithets as "infidels," "semi-Sadducees," etc., there is an argument we can use which will always be effective; and that is a blameless Christian life. When people who have heard us spoken of by such names as the above come to know us, if they find us sustaining a Christian character it will cause the lie to rebound to to our good, and we shall be esteemed the more for having been traduced.

OF all the theological mixtures, deliver us from the dose in which the literal second coming is mingled with the notion of going to heaven at death. He must have a wide mouth who would swallow it. If saints at death enter upon reward in the presence of God, freed from a prison-house-body, to float in ecstatic disembodied bliss, the prospect of return to earth for judgment and to be re-caged cannot seem any thing less than—absurd. People believe it because they suppose they must—they think it is written in God's Book. Ah! if they would but search for themselves and learn the truth, instead of trusting to tradition and assertions of others, hat light would illumine their minds!

ADVOCATES of the Resurrection of the body should be careful what arguments they use against 'materialists.' One writer in the Advent Herald objects to materialism that it makes the resurrected man a new creature! Very well! Admit it for argument's sake. Then what becomes of your loved dogma of the resurrection of the body—instead of the body rising, we have the creation of a new body just like the old one! And is that a resurrection? The same correspondent says, "God said that Abraham and Isaac lived in spirit—which was evidence that he will raise their bodies again;" in which he falls into two slips; first attributing to God words he never uttered; and second stultifying himself by saying "raise their bodies again," instead of saying—"create new bodies" for the recaging of their souls!

ONE of the latter day doctrines is that of Mrs. Woodhull, the women that Theodore Tilton is striving to elevate as the standard of female character. In a course of a late lecture in New York she remarked:

> Free love will be an integral part of the religion of the future. The legitimate sequence of social freedom is free love, or freedom of the affections. "And you are a free lover?" Yes, I am a free lover! [Loud hisses.] I have an inalienable, constitutional and natural right to love whom I may, to love as long or as short a period as I can, to change that love every day if I please, [renewed hisses], and with that right neither you nor any law you can frame have any right to interfere; and I have further right to demand a free and unrestricted exercise of that right, and it is your duty not only to accord it, but, as a community to see that I am protected in it. I trust that I am fully understood, for I mean just that and nothing less!

THE orthodox journals are quietly detailing the following out of old heathen philosophy, revamped by Emerson, without a word of explanation or protest:

> Of immortality the soul, when it is well employed, is incurious. It is so well that it is sure it will be well. It asks no questions of the Supreme power. 'Tis a higher thing to confide that if it is best we should live,—'tis higher to have this conviction than to have the lease of indefinite centuries, and millenniums, and æons. Higher than the question of our duration is the question of our deserving. Immortality will come to such as are fit for it, and he who would be a great soul now. It is a doctrine too great to rest on any legend, that is, on any man's experience but our own. It must be proved from our own activity and designs, which imply an interminable future for their play.—Emerson.

—They can publish heathen ideas without note or comment; but let one pen the sentence—"Immortality can be obtained only through Christ," and obtain circulation for it in their columns if he can.

THEOLOGIANS, like children, sometimes tell tales out of school. Br. Clark of the Methodist Recorder puts on record the following point against immaterialism made by a "heathen Chinee."

> The Chinaman, heathen as he is, sometimes asks the Christian hard questions. Sometime since there was a death in a prominent family of one of the churches, and, according to the fashion in aristocratic life, the surviving members of the household were absent from the sanctuary for the two Sabbaths succeeding the funeral. The whole family were changed in apparel, and now wore somber black, and the old home was made the more desolate and gloomy by these artificial observances. A Chinaman well acquainted with the circumstances, and knowing that the departed was a Christian lady, and that her relatives professed the same faith, inquired why it was that so much grief followed the change which had made a saint immortal! If heaven is so happy a place, and the eternal home of all believers, why should all these emblems of sorrow mark the going thither of any soul set free? And then the hardest question of all: "What for do the rest of the families who no sick stay away the two Sundays from the church?"

A WRITER in the Christian Observer thinks if modern "literature be infused, inflamed and animated with the essence of war; if military men are exalted, while far abler and better men are thrown aside; if military men and military themes constitute the subjects of glowing eulogies and splendid applause; if military science is taught and a military spirit engendered and perpetuated in national schools, erected and supported for that object, and if all this is to be sustained by the military frenzy of the church, the inevitable conclusion is that apparently, we are farther from the banishment of war, and the reign of peace, then when Cæsar mounted the throne of the old Roman world."

—And he is quite right if 'the reign of peace' is to come about by a temporal millennium. No wonder the friends of that fable begin to be discouraged—their prospect is gloomy enough. Those who look for the literal return of the Prince of Peace to establish everlasting peace may however look up, and lift up their heads. They are right, as the multiplying tokens all signify.

A STRAY copy of the "Minutes of the 47st Annual Meeting of the Apple Creek Association of United Baptists," in Western Central Illionis has found its way to our table. Among others items of business we find the following:]

> 'Resolved, That as the report gave forth that Mt. Pleasant church [at Medora, Ill.] holds in her communion members believing and teaching the doctrine of Materialism, that a committee of five ministers be appointed by this body to examine into the facts and report accordingly at its next session.'

—If we are rightly informed there are in the church referred to a goodly number by the pastor who hold Advent views. Would that the entire Association could be induced to candidly investigate the subject. In the 'Principles of Union,' we find the following article: "We believe that the end of the world is approaching, and the time when God hath appointed, in which he will judge the world by that man whom he hath ordained, Christ Jesus; which judgment will fix the eternal state of all men." This is wholsome doctrine, and much to be commended. Would that our Baptist brethren of this Association could clearly perceive the related truths concerning the nature and destiny of man. Perhaps many of them may yet do so.

AN APOLOGY.

Those whose business relations have not been specially affected by the Chicago fire can have little idea of the delays and disappointments arising from the disarrangement of the channels of business by the terrible disaster. Not only immense stocks of goods destroyed, some of which cannot be replaced for months, but the railroads were flooded with free and other freight to supply immediate necessities—receiving more than they could handle. This affects us seriously in the matter of transportation of paper. But the great difficulty has been to get paper at all, last week we sent out about 1,500 copies of THE TIMES printed upon what in ordinary times we would have disdained to use for wrapping paper. But it was that or nothing. This week our paper is detained on the railroads and is therefore three days late.

We have dealings in Chicago in two leading items—paper and printing material. The houses with which we deal—and by the way we can commend them heartily to the public—are J. W. Butler & Co., in paper; and Marder, Luse & Co., for all kinds of printing materials. They have used every exertion to fill our orders, and have only failed in what business tact and energy could not accomplish.

We had ready for the printer several tracts and pamphlets, besides our Almanac and year-book. But we could not get the paper anywhere, and at any [illegible], within reach the prices for [illegible]ing or electrotyping were [illegible]ous. We have waited patiently, thinking we might by extra exertions yet catch up, but in vain.

Our Almanac will be late. We shall issue it as soon as possible; but it will be late. New tracts are delayed, and so are new editions of old ones. Collins' Address is loudly called for. Paper for it and other things has been on the way for several weeks, and is expected daily.

This, in brief, is our situation. We have not lost our energy, but have been contending with unusual taxes upon it. We beg the forbearance of our friends everywhere. Things are getting in better shape all the time, and we expect soon that business will be "running in the old ruts" and with the usual regularity.

As to the TIMES, we mean to keep it out of the ruts except the rut of Adventism. If that is a rut at all it is the old groove worn by the apostles and early church, and we are happy to follow in their ways. They looked for their Lord as the very chiefest of all events and all pleasures. THE TIMES will inculcate the same idea. Its name indicates its mission;—that we live in the time of the advent—and the signs of the times should be eagerly watched and carefully recorded. THE ADVENT TIMES will do it; and in such a spirit as will prove that we may be thoroughly Adventist, and yet "CHRISTIAN."

But we have wandered from the subject. We meant only to explain to our friends that we are not dilatory, or negligent in our business; but have been pestered, delayed, disappointed and hindered by circumstances we could not control. We trust our friends will bear with us, and give a new lift in sympathy and aid, to help over the difficult spot. There are great things before us. And should the Lord come at any moment he will not be displeased, nor we feel the worse in meeting him, because he finds us "devising liberal things." Let us take large views, strike for great things, make noble sacrifices, and the reward, here and hereafter both, is sure.

ADVENT.

We have a good word for the Episcopal church. In the closing month of each year it has a season called "Advent," containing four Sundays. On these Sundays the clergy are expected to direct their attention particularly to the subject of the Advent, and this is the evident reason why there are so many Adventists in sentiment in that church. We would not desire Adventism to be established by law,—by no means; but we do wish every minister in every church could be required to study the subject and speak upon it at least four times in a year. A flood of light would break upon their minds, and through them upon the church.

The New Testament is full of it; the early church found unspeakable joy in contemplating and proclaiming it; and now it is only the few that declare the Lord's personal return as a matter of much moment; and to be very much in earnest about it is to subject one's self to the suspicion of heresy. But let us walk in the old paths. The old wine is best. "I come quickly!" was never sweeter language in all the eighteen centuries gone by than in the closing days of this year. Never could the waiting few more heartily join in John's "Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus!" This is the hope! This the only hope! This is "that blessed hope!" Receive it in the love of it. It will purify the heart, and sanctify spirit, soul and body, and keep you blameless until the hope is lost in the realization. Jesus' coming was the theme of the apostolic church. Let it be yours.

In a former article we showed that the decree referred to in Dan. 9:25, if we are to accept "the natural sense" of the language could be no other than that of Cyrus to "restore and build Jerusalem;" and the application of the prophecy to other decrees only introduces discord and contradiction where harmony should exist, and indeed was, when we allow the natural sense to prevail.

We now propose to bring the passage to a further test by common sense. It has been assumed that the sixty-nine weeks, and the sixty-two weeks and the one week of this passage are each integral parts of the greater period of seventy weeks, mentioned in v. 24. Is this the natural sense? Let us inquire. The seventy weeks are first mentioned, and are said to be cut off [from the 2300 days] upon "thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." Without going into an exegesis of all these items, we simply remark that the most natural sense seems to be that within the first seventy weeks of the symbolic 2300 days, all these things would be accomplished.

Here we have one complete and definite proposition; and following it we find three others. We will quote the passage in full, and without the unnatural divisions introduced by the Roman monk's "verses."

"Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks The street shall be built again and the wall even in troublous times And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off but not for himself And that people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary and the end thereof shall be with a flood and unto the end of the war desolations are determined And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease and for the overspreading of the abominations he shall make it desolate even until the consummation and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

We have purposely omitted all punctuation in the above quotation. We will now give its separate propositions, as they appear to us, and leave it to each reader to decide whether it seems to them the natural construction. And first we have the following:

"Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks."

2. "The street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times; and after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself."

3. "And the people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

The first proposition is clear. The Jews were in captivity; their city was in ruins. When the edict was issued for the restoration and rebuilding of Jerusalem, they might begin to count, and in sixty-nine symbolic weeks, or 483 years, Messiah the Prince should appear. To this the facts correspond. Cyrus gave the decree B. C. 488, and in B. C. 5, Messiah was born in Bethlehem of Judea.

The second proposition declares the rebuilding of the city and the wall: and after sixty-two weeks—sixty-two weeks from when? Evidently from the completion of "the street and the wall." Where else? Could it be clearer that the building of the city and wall is mentioned as an era from which the period named (sixty-two weeks) is to date? What are the facts? The walls of the city were completed in B. C. 406. If we add 434 years to this we are brought to A. D. 29 as the termination of the sixty-two weeks. About six months "after" this, in A. D. 30, the Messiah was "cut off," crucified by his own people. And in this the Scripture was fulfilled.

3. "And the people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." There can be no dispute that this people is the Roman people, and the Prince their prince. And they did destroy the city and the temple, and "the end thereof was with a flood." "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." Who is "he?" Imagine one acquainted grammar but unacquainted with any exposition of this passage, asked this question. Would he not say, "I must read the preceding context to find the antecedent? And would he not say, "the Prince of the people that should come" is the grammatical antecedent of the pronoun "he?" Could he conceive any reason for violating this natural and grammatical sense, and passing over this antecedent, and making a parenthesis of the passage relating to him, and making the cut-off Messiah the confirmer of the covenant? And when he learned the facts that the Romans began the war which broke in pieces the Jewish nation in A. D. 65; and that it continued seven years; and that in A. D. 70 Jerusalem fell, and the sacrifices of the Temple worship did then cease and have never since been resumed; would he not feel morally certain that he was right, and that the Roman Prince was positively the predicted agent for fulfilling the covenant? Most certainly he would.

Then it might be said to him—"We know the facts seem to correspond with the prediction in a very apt manner; but what covenant did the Roman prince confirm? What covenant had he made with them?" Then allusion would be made to "the new covenant" long promised by God, and confirmed in Jesus Christ. And this was the covenant referred to, that Christ preached personally three and a-half years; was then slain, the great anti-typical sacrifice, and so "caused the oblation and sacrifice to cease" by fulfilling them. And then his disciples preached the remaining three and a-half years, among the Jews confirming his word and covenant.

But he would reply: this all seems unnatural. I do not learn that this covenant was 'confirmed' by Christ in any other act than his death as the appointed victim, after the fashion of Eastern covenants: and he did not cause the sacrifices to cease, while the other prince did. Is there no other covenant to which this might refer?

If he were then cited to Deut. ch. 29 (please read), and should carefully re-read Dan. 9:26, 27, and then hear the story from Josephus of how Moses' denunciations were literally fulfilled in that dreadful seven years of war, would he, could he doubt that his first impression as to the natural and grammatical antecedent of the pronoun "he" in v. 27 was correct? We cannot conceive that he could.

We have, seen, in this chapter, four distinct periods clearly mentioned: Seventy weeks, reaching to the last war of the Jews, commencing A. D. [illegible].

Sixty-nine weeks, from Cyrus' decree to the birth of Messiah.

Sixty-two weeks, from the completion of the wall until just previous to the crucifixion.

One week, including the greatest and the final war upon the Jews, ending in their dispersion, never again to be reassembled as a nation.

EARTH AND MAN.

The Watchman and Reflector calls attention to one of the plainest doctrines of the Bible in the following terms:

The subject of the essay read by Rev. D. Weston before the Pastoral Conference at South Abington was "The Common Destiny of Earth and Man." The essay was an able one, and though long, it was listened to with deep interest, and its publication was unanimously requested. The following is an imperfect sketch of it:

1. The earth and man were made for each other.

The earth is physically adapted to man. It was prepared for him by the constant workings of the forces of nature through the pre-adamic ages. No higher personage than man, says Agassiz, is to be expected on earth. So, too, it is adapted to his intellectual nature. Man is a kind of mediator between God and the lower animals. His duplex [?] organization adapts him to be God's vicegerent. Earth is thus man's habitat.

2. Man was originally pure, and the earth was adapted to him in his purity. Both were "good." The earth was (1) a place of great beauty and fertility; (2) a place for the natural, pleasant and healthful exercise without weariness of man's powers; (3) a place where God manifested his presence and man freely communed with him; (4) a place where man, if he had not sinned, would have been immortal. This immortality would have been dependent on God; still man was designed for it. All this was true of the earth inside of Eden, whatever may have been its condition outside.

3. Man fell by sin; and the earth partook of his curse.

The climax of this for man was death; not physical only, but that of his whole life in God. But as the curse on man is found to be deep and universal beyond what might be inferred from the original terms, so it is found to be with the curse on the earth. The discord between man and earth is as the discord between man and God. Proofs of a fallen world are found in the vegetable creation, but still more in the animal. Witness the low character of some of the latter; their sufferings from each other, and from man; their decay and death.

Is this view in harmony with the doctrine of the imputation of Adam's sin to his posterity? The question is, if the present condition of the lower creation is dependent on man's sin, how was it before Adam? There was the same law of perverted tendencies in pre-adamic times as now.

Some have explained this as a result of the fall of angels. But God's language to man was, "Cursed be the ground for thy sake." Others have declared it inexplicable, or have referred it to the soverign will of God. But the earth was cursed for man's sake. Our own view is that this shadow which rested on our world in the pre-adamic age was but an adumbration of man's sin. Eden represented what the whole world would have been if Adam had remained pure. From the beginning God adapted every thing to the condition into which Adam's sin would place it. Death entered into God's plan. This view, it will be seen, inclines to the supralapsarian.

Man and the earth are to be raised together from their degraded state. As the earth partakes of the fall in Adam, so it is to partake of the deliverance in Christ. This restoration is at first partial in respect both to earth and man, but it will at last be complete in respect to both.

4. Will the restored and glorified earth be the abode of glorified man?

The deliverance together implies their future and eternal union.

It is evident from the views of the essayist, and from the writings of many distinguished modern thinkers, that the present tendency of Christian opinion respecting the future condition of the earth and of the relation of the saved to it, is back to that of the ancient church. We were sorry that there was no time for the discussion of the essay by the members of the Conference. We hope it will be published and receive the attention of the press. Its discussion will be timely, for the minds of many are unsettied on the subject.

—Were it not for the spiritualizing of God's word there would be but one opinion on this subject, and that the earth is to be the final inheritance of the redeemed. But we notify the Watchman and its essayist that their doctrine will never be popular until the notion of going to heaven at death is exploded. People will never see any consistency or beauty in leaving heaven for earth. On the other hand if the true doctrine of the future inheritance is preached, it will stimulate inquiry, and direct thought to the topics of the nature of man, his condition in death, and the nature and object of the resurrection. And inquiry on these subjects tends as naturally to overthrow immaterialism as does water to run down hill.

From California.

Br. Fassett and wife, with myself and wife have been holding meetings in Vallejo for a few weeks past. The The Lord was with us and blessed his own word and truth, to the salvation of many. A number of sinners converted. One Catholic woman was brought from darkness into God's marvellous light. I never saw a greater change. You can see the religion of Jesus all over her face. Her countenance is full of joy and her heart is glad. Thanks be to God for a Gospel that breaks the sinner's heart and heals it again. We baptized nine, and others go forward the next opportunity. About three thousand people were on the banks to witness this beautiful ordinance, emblematic of the death and resurrection of our blessed Lord, and also of our resurrection if we sleep in Jesus when he comes

The good work is still progressing in that place. A number more stand ready to join us. It is a blessed people, sound in the faith, and great grace rests upon them. There are seven different nations represented in the church and in preaching the word there we get the truth before some of the nations of the earth.

We all feel to thank God that he ever sent Br. and Sr. Fasset to this coast. The Lord is with them and they are not afraid to preach the whole truth. Sr. Fassett draws large crowds and is doing a good work. We do not believe in whipping the devil round the stump; but drive him out of his hiding place and then put God's great hounds of truth after him and let all the people see him, and fly to Christ for salvation. Let us be honest before God and preach the whole truth, and let the people know what is coming so they can prepare to meet the end. I am well aware the devil is willing for us to preach Christ and him crucified, repentance and faith, holiness and sanctification: all this the devil is willing for us to preach and so are all the churches; and for all this you can remain in the church; but preach the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and no life out of Christ, and it will set the devil and all his host to hopping, and out of the church you must go! The old falsehood the devil told in Eden—"Thou shalt not surely die," is the foundation of most false doctrines that have existed since.

I have been an Adventist about thirty years, and with my long experience, I find the best way is to preach the plain truths of God's word all out straight, so the people can understand. Men are perishing for lack of knowledge. And shall we withhold the word of life from them? We can go out to preach sanctification and experimental religion, and raise a great hue and cry, and excitement, and after we are gone a few months you can hardly see a trace of it. We Adventists have a present truth to preach, and the cross and reproach and persecution goes with it, and the crown also at the end! Let us be valiant for God's great truth, and then a good work will follow us.

Sabbath Dialogues.

W. Good morning, Br. C. I have called to talk with you a little, as I learn you are not a sabbath keeper.

C. Why, yes, I am trying to keep one sabbath.

W. Well, which is it? God's holy day, or the mark of the beast—Pope-Sunday?

C. Well, brother, I will tell you. It is not a weekly sabbath I am trying to keep, but a daily rest, or sabbath. It is the one that Paul speaks of in Heb. 4, which is to rest from my own works as God did from his. Sabbath means rest, or ceasing from works; see Heb. 4:10.

W. Then you are not keeping God's holy day that he gave man at the creation to keep forever?

C. Well, no; I can not say that I am; for I do not know of such a day being given to man at that time.

W. Why, do we not read that God "hallowed and sanctified" the seventh day? Sanctify means to set apart. So God set that day apart for man.

C. That God sanctified or set apart that day with himself as a rest day, is true, but that he gave it to man to keep, is an assumption, as there is no such record.

W. But does not Christ say the "sabbath was made for man? So it must have been given there. To be in order for all men it must begin with man.

C. All men! It does not say it was made for all men, but that it was made for man, and not man for it. Now I say it was made for Israel after the flesh. Were they not men? And this was 2,600 after creation.

W. What! no sabbath law before Moses' day? Does not God in the Decalogue (Ex. 20.) speak of the sabbath as if it had been known before, when he says, "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy?

C. That does not necessarily follow from that expression, for remember means especially, From this time onward. But then, the sabbath was given some eighteen days before, or fifteen days before they came to Mt. Sinai, while yet in the wilderness of Sin. Here God introduced the sabbath. (Ex. 16.) Here is the first introduction among men that the record gives. Now there is a cause for every thing, and no other people ever had the same cause or reason with them.

W. What! had not all men the same reason as they, when God assigns the reason, or cause, as his resting from his labor? Therefore all men should rest on that day.

C. Nay, Br. W., you make a great mistake on this point. You do not seem to distinguish between the reason why God gave a day to be kept, and the reason why he gbae them the seventh for that day in preference to either of the six. Now Ex. 20. only gives the reason why the seventh is sabbath day, or rest day, and that is because he rested the seventh. But the reason why he gave them a day to keep is given in Deut. 5:15, and is, "Remember that thou wast a servant in Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore (for this reason) the Lord thy God commandeth thee to keep the sabbath day." Their servitude in Egypt was one continual work and no rest. So it seems as a best reminder of that fact, and their mighty deliverance therefrom, God gives them its contrast,—a day in which they are to do no work.

W. Now, brother, I have always understood the reason why God enjoined a sabbath to be kept, was because he rested from his works.

C. So have many others; but you see that it is not so. You will notice God lays stress on the matter: "six days shalt thou work; but the seventh is the sabbath." He then gives that as the reason that he did so; therefore that should be their rest day.

W. And you say why a day was given at all was to remind them of servitude in Egypt and deliverance from the same?

C. Certainly. So the record reads.

W. And you think there was no sabbath before that?

C. Well, to the record again; this will give us some light on that point. Moses says, "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb" (of which the sabbath was a part.) He made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." (Deut. 5:2, 3.) You see no other people before them, no not even their fathers, had the sabbath to keep, from the fact that cause is always before effect; hence before deliverance from bondage there was no cause. Here was its origin.

W. You may be right as to the time when it was introduced, but that has nothing to do with our obligations to keep it. Since the law has been given and the sabbath is a part of the same, it must be binding upon us, for the law can not broken.

C. That depends whether we are the same people, or have the same cause as they. If not, then it is not binding on us. If we have not the cause then we are not affected by it.

W. I see where you are; but I think you will find it a harder task to shew the sabbath law ended, than you did to find its origin, for Jesus said: "Heaven and earth shall pass, but not one jot or title of the law should fail till all was fulfilled." Again, : "I come not to destroy the law or the prophets, but fulfil."

C. Very well; what do you understand that text to prove?

W. I understand by it that Christ was not to do it away, but to live up to it, and enforce it on others.

C. Now Webster says destroy means to demolish and ruin, or in other words, to spoil or break; like my having a contract with you to do a piece of work in a given time. If I do not do it, I destroy, ruin, or break the contract. If I do the work in the given time I fulfill the contract; and, of course, the contract is at an end, and is not destroyed, either. So Christ fulfilled the covenant, or law, which brought it to an end. Hence Paul says, (Rom. 10:4) "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth." Let me give a few more texts on this point. Paul says God made promises to Abraham of an inheritance, and then adds: "The law which was four hundred and thirty years after could not destroy the promise; for if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? (what is its use?) It was added (to the promises four hundred and thirty years after they were given) because of transgression, (how long?) till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." (Gal. 3.) This seed, v. 16, he shews, is Christ. He came eighteen hundred years ago, when the law came to an end,—was added no longer.

W. Br. C., I wish you to understand that there are two laws spoken of in the New Testament; the one was done away by Christ; the other was confirmed and established. You get those texts which speak of the going away of the law of Moses, and apply them as though they referred to the law of God also; which cannot be.

C. I do not understand any such thing. There is no such distinction made. It is all called "the law," in the singular number, and is never put in the plural. If so, where?

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We hear rumors that Adventism is making inroads upon the Winnebrennarians at a rate unpleasant to the members of that body. We have seen a letter from an Iowa minist er that shows a clear head as well as sound heart on this subject. And the news from the late "Pennsylvania Eldership" is quite animating. What to do with the Materialists was a most perplexing question. They thrive if left alone; and thrive still more if interfered with. It is a difficult case surely. ——We learn that the Publishers of the American Edition of Constable's work on Future Punishment are getting out the third thousand of that book. Of course they do not publish so many in order to give them away—they are selling. A good sign!——Br. L. H. Little of Rose Hill, Johnson Co., Mo., will welcome any Advent preacher passing that way.——S. E Mabey reports a good interest at Rochelle, Ill. One converted at his meeting there.

THE ADVENT TIMES.

THE TIMES, the only periodical published by Advent Christians West of Rochester, N. Y., will enter upon its eighth year in 1872. Its success in the past has been flattering, and its managers intend that in the future it shall deserve even greater prosperity and more rapid growth.

A leading feature of the paper for at least six months, will be a discussion between the Editor, and Eld. Clark Braden, a noted debater of the Disciple church. Each paper will contain an article from each of the debaters—an affirmative and reply.

The discussion will be based upon the Scriptures, and involve (1) the nature of man; and (2) the future reward and punishment—questions of vital moment and intense interest, as every person who has felt the popular pulse well knows.

In the first proposition Eld. Braden affirms the endless conscious existence of the spirit of man.

In the second the editor of THE TIMES will affirm the unconscious state of the dead, and the resurrection their only hope.

In the third he will affirm that literal destruction is the doom of the finally impenitent, while eternal life is the gift of God through Christ.

In the fourth and last proposition Eld. Braden affirms that the final punishment will consist in banishment from God and the society of all pure beings, in a state of endless conscious existence.

The person who wishes to read both sides of this question in condensed, pithy form, will hardly have a better opportunity.

Besides the above, the Editor will furnish his "Journal," or narrative of the progress of Adventism in the parts he may visit, with incidents of travel, experience, the past history of the cause, and its present prospects.

The editorial department will be kept up, and filled with articles upon live questions, and "the present truth" in all its features. The signs of the times, fulfillment of prophecy, and everything indicative of "the last times" will receive due attention.

We have many able correspondents, whose contributions have greatly strengthened THE TIMES in the past, and we anticipate even better things from them in the future.

The pages devoted to letters and extracts, and accounts of travel and missionary work must necessarily grow in interest as the field widens, and we have more workers, more writers, and more to narrate.

THE TIMES is not a "NEWS" paper; yet it will continue to give a weekly digest of the more important events of the day, at home and abroad—a terse record of the signs of the times, and indications of the approaching crisis of the world.

We shall give the news concerning Adventism all over the world, in brief, so far as we can obtain it.

We shall occasionally give pieces of music and illustrations that will interest all.

Finally, THE TIMES will, we think, deserve, and we know it needs, five hundred paying subscribers at once! Shall we have them?

Conference Minutes

Western Ministerial Conference.

Met at the Advent chapel in Chicago, Dec. 10, at ten o'clock a. m. The following address was read by the President, Eld. J. V. Himes.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Brethren: I congratulate you on our meeting together to-day. After a lapse of thirty-one years from our first Conference in Chardon St. chapel, Boston, Mass., on the shore of the Atlantic, we meet in the metropolis of the great Interior. We can look back with wonder and gratitude upon what "God hath wrought." The people that was then thrown into the sea produced a circle whose widening wave has extended to every shore. The light on the coming kingdom gleaming from the torch of prophecy has touched and glanced on every land. The Jew and the Gentile alike have heard the loud clear voice of prophecy declaring—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him!"

The proclamation was just made in the East, and from that point extended chiefly North and West. The South was not open to us, and hence very little was done in that direction. New England and the Middle States, with the Canadas, were the most favored fields, and received the truth. Some of the present North-western States were then territories, or open lands where the Indian and buffalo held dominion.

The Western States east of the Mississippi heard the truth in the early part of our history, but to only a limited extent. At a later date books and tracts, with papers, were circulated, and self-denying missionaries and colporteurs proclaimed the truth, when believers and churches began to be multiplied, and at length State Conferences were organized, and the movement began to assume a position of power for good.

At this period of its progress some elements of discord were introduced by certain parties from the East. Among which was the seventh-day, on the Jewish sabbath dogmas, their clairvoyant oracle as authority for religious faith equal to the word of God itself, and of fresher date. Another class embraced and taught with more or less positiveness modified forms of English Millennarianism. The Adventists as a body, however, stood firm. They could not receive the new views; and although some were led astray by them, the most remained true and faithful.

About 1861, after many trials and struggles, the cause began to assume a new aspect in Illinois, and in some other States; and in 1864 a weekly paper was started, and a general Publishing Association was organized, with a view to unite the whole strength of the West in proclaiming more widely and effectually the gospel of the kingdom. Since then, by unity, industry and liberal sacrifice, and the blessing of God, we have been raised to a position of power and great usefulness in his cause. While he has, also, laid upon us new responsibilities.

We have met to counsel together to find how we may best discharge the duties of our position, in view of the hastening judgment. The great field of the North and Southwest contains more than twelve millions of souls. As yet but few of these have been reached by the living voice of the missionary, or by the press. But the voice from heaven proclaims to us, Go preach to these multitudes my gospel; especially "this gospel of the kingdom." God in his providence seems to have assigned to us the Western field. He has planted us in the great Interior, and bids us occupy, and carry the gospel to the Pacific, and organize to the Western shore of the continent, should there be time before his glorious coming.

OUR PRESENT CONDITION.

The present state of the Advent cause in the West is one of considerable prosperity. There is an upward and onward tendency. There is a healthy growth in the churches and conferences, while new ones are being constantly added. The last year has witnessed the increase of ministers, churches and conferences over any former period.

But this increase would not be a blessing without unity. All healthful growth is connected with the unity of the parts. The life and the prosperity of the church consists in its union with Christ, and the members with each other in the spiritual and divine life. But to this is to be added unity in plans of labor, all working to one point, and for one object. Such a church will stand firm and will prosper mid all opposing obstacles. They will prosper and prevail in the truth and in the Lord.

But I must here add with prosperity and unity, we also enjoy by the blessing of God a state of spiritual life and blessedness. There is in all the churches much prayer and hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Our people have no sympathy for the church feasts and festivals of the day. There is a tendency to the higher life in Christ, and a desire for a full preparation to meet him at his coming. With this theme is added a longing for the salvation of souls. And the labor for souls is manifest in frequent conversions. With this spiritual life in the membership and ministry, there is hope of good. And laboring with this spirit a people will be prepared for the Lord's glorious advent.

OUR NUMBERS.

Of our numbers we cannot boast being yet a small people. Those who have estimated the number without the statistics have sometimes greatly erred. Friends have estimated too high, and opposers too low. No reliance can be placed upon general estimates. Two classes of Adventists may be numbered. One live in the churches. These cannot be properly numbered as being of us. They belong to other bodies, and there they give their money and influence. The class that we can fairly number are those who are with us out and out, not in name, only, but in heart, personal presence, and material aid. When we count these we shall find the number to be small. It will be the "little flock." And their greatness, power and success is all of God. We are indeed a small people with great hearts, great truths, great hopes, and great faith. And we look for a great and glorious kingdom, and for a home with the great multitude which no man could number.

OUR CONFERENCES.

We now have one Conference in Michigan, one in Ohio, one in Indiana, three in Illinois, one in Iowa, besides the Christian Conference of Advent believers, one in S. W. Iowa and N. W. Missouri, one in Wisconsin, one in Minnesota, and one in West Virginia. While the body in Pennsylvania and New York have expressed strong sympathies for us. We have no positive statistics, except in Michigan. They have 27 preachers, 55 churches, 1,300 members. We could make a general estimate of other States, but think it wiser to wait and get correct data. We may safely reckon upon thousands of believers, with over two hundred preachers. These are actual, reliable members. They are workers in the Lord's vineyard.

With the com[illegible]ll number of workers [illegible] is remarkable to see ho[illegible] m[illegible] [illegible]een done. It is "not by might nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord."

OUR POSITION.

In relation to prophetical truth we hold a special position, different from the Christian world. We believe the prophetic history of the world is nearly filled up, and that the prophetic periods are nearly run out, and that we are near the judgment. We cannot, therefore, look for the conversion of the world. We are obliged to reject this popular idea. We look upon it as unscriptural, and impossible. Because when Christ does come the world will be as it was in the days of Noah.

As Christ will remain in the "Holy of Holies" till his work, as our High Priest, is done, and as he "comes the second time without sin [a sin offering] unto salvation," it follows that the mystery of God will then be finished, and the day of probation end. The next dispensation is one in which Christ and his saints are glorified. His work of both prophet and priest being finished, he now reigns as king in his kingdom—The kingdom that "shall not be destroyed;" the kingdom which has "no end." It is a kingdom that comes after the stone has smitten the "image" and "ground it to powder;" after all the kingdoms of earth have passed away, and no place is found for them. The kingdom of God for which we look fills the whole earth. At its setting up Christ comes in the clouds of heaven and rewards every man according to his works.

God has given the world three dispensations. The Patriarchal, the Jewish, the Christian. The next dispensation or state will be eternal. They that are counted worthy to obtain "that world," shall be as the angels of God, and die no more. In the next dispensation there is to be no generation or corruption. There is no probation. There is no death. The subjects of this dispensation have been redeemed out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation. They are the resurrected and translated ones. They have put on immortality and become the actual possessors of the kingdom which shall not be destroyed, the kingdom under the whole heaven. This is the new heaven and new earth, in which the righteous shall dwell. It is a state of unmixed immortality.

If there is anything clear and undoubted in the New Testament, it is this, that the work of redemption is finished at the second coming of Christ. At that time Paul looked for his crown, with all "that love his appearing." "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive the crown of glory that fadeth not away." "And when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

The New Testament must be the expounder of the old. The new is the later, greater, and final light. And by this we are instructed with regard to the closing dispensation of mercy to man. If there had been another dispensation of probation for Jew or Gentile, Christ would have told us; or the apostles with the Spirit given them would have preached it. But no such revelation has been made, and failing to find it in the New Testament, it would be neither wise or safe to build theories from Old Testament prophecies to contradict the new.

Our position as to time is clearly seen in the fulfillment of prophecy. Nothing remains in the image but the smiting by "the stone." The "sixth trumpet" has sounded, and the second wo is past, and "the third wo cometh quickly." The sixth seal has been opened, and the seventh is to be opened as the next event in the prophecy. And the signs in the sun, moon and stars, with the distress of nations with perplexity show that we may look for the Lord to come soon. The prophetic periods also, all terminate within a circle of a few years, at most. And we now stand amid the blazing light of the omens of the last day.

ON DOCTRINAL TRUTH.

Without going into the whole theory or range of gospel truth, I will here give some of the points that distinguish us as a people. These may be summed up as follows:

1. The absolute mortality of man.
2. The only hope of the future life is through Christ our Life-Giver, in the resurrection.
3. The residence and home of the saints is the earth renewed, when the new heavens and new earth are given in the restitution.

With these views, and others already referred to, we continue in well doing, seeking for glory, honor, immortality. We expect at the last trump that this mortal will put on immortality, and death be swallowed up in victory.

In relation to the wicked, they are to come forth from the grave, to be judged and punished with literal and everlasting destruction: and this will take place at the second advent, when Christ is glorified in his saints.

D[illegible] OUR POSITION.

We [illegible] a faithful testimony against [illegible]rrible doctrine of eternal torment, [illegible]reached in the orthodox pulpit. We should show the falsity of the dogma by the word of God, and proclaim the true doctrine, the wages of sin is death, and not eternal life in torture.

We should bear a faithful testimony against the doctrine that holds out a hope for the lost in a future dispensation. It is a hazardous thing to risk our eternal existence on the unscriptural idea of a future probation. "There is no knowledge or wisdom, or device, in the grave whither thou goest." "Now is the accepted time, and now is the only day of salvation."

We must give the last message of God to a dying world. "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." (Rev. 14:6, 7.) This angel symbolizes a class of religious teachers who are to proclaim this message. If we are right in our position and views of prophecy, then we are without doubt a part of that ministry who are to give this message. We are bound to show that the prophecies respecting the papal power have been fulfilled; that the judgment has set upon it, and that its dominion over the kings of the earth is now taken away; that his power has been taken from him, as revealed in Dan. 7:25. And this being proved the next grand event is the coming of Christ, the final judgment on all men, and the setting up of the kingdom under the whole heaven.

These things are to be preached as solemn realities, and not mere speculations. The anti-christ has fallen. His temporal power is gone. He is no more to-day than a priest of Rome, even though the head bishop of that church. He that once ruled the world and held sovereigns in subjection to his will, is now powerless. He has appealed to all the potentates of the earth for help and for restoration in vain. Not a single government has answered his prayer for help. He has literally come to his end, and none to help him. In one day this great hierarchy has come to nought, and the head of this once terrible power sits in the dust, bewailing his calamities. What next? The coming of Christ, to destroy "the man of sin" by the brightness of his coming.

We are a missionary people, and must cultivate and encourage every means to spread the light and truth. Let the proclamation be sounded in every city, town, and hamlet. Christ is coming! Christ is coming to judgment! Prepare, prepare for the judgment!

The press must also continue to speak out on this solemn theme. The weekly messenger, the books, tracts, and fly-sheets, should all be freighted with the message—"The hour of judgment is come!" Special efforts should be made to call out men and women to enter into this work of spreading the tidings—"Behold he cometh!" And the faithful heralds of the cross should be sustained and kept in the field for continual labor.

Finally. Let us all renew our covenant with God to carry on this work. Let us consecrate ourselves anew to-day. Let us divest ourselves of worldly policy, and of that which is esteemed among men, and the praise and honor of God. Let us work for God like Noah, regardless of public opinion. The world is blind. The church is backslidden, and seeks worldly ease, and sits in darkness. Let us come out of all worldly influences, and dedicate all to God, and live for the judgment. Let us not only consecrate all our powers of mind, but also our worldly substance as it may be needed to spread the truth. Give for the truth. Pray for its success, and if need be, let us be willing to die for it.

Let us wake up to a greater boldness in the Lord. Rouse the slumberers. Call out every element that can be made to act for God and truth. Let us organise the living elements, and put every element of power in its place for action. Let none stand in another's way. Every man at his post, all work, and all work in harmony. What one builds, let the other strengthen; save all we gain, push into larger fields, and let the cry be, "Yet more, yet more, my God!" Agonize, struggle in prayer! Press on in the work! Press the battle to the gate. Let us organize victory, and not die childless.

All can do something. Let us do that something for Christ. Let us do it in his sweet, loving spirit. And while we contend earnestly for the faith, let us speak the truth in love. Let us, like Stephen, even amid the the fiercest opposition of our foes, be filled with faith and the Holy Spirit.

The President was followed by Eld. Frank Burr in a telling address. We give the substance of it:

ELD FRANK BURR'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Chairman: With your permission, I would like to speak a few moments this morning in an informal manner upon a subject that presses upon my mind and heart at this time with more than ordinary force—I mean, the subject of the NECESSITY OF A CONSECRATED MINISTRY.

It seems to me there never was a time in the history of the church when there was more need of entire consecration on the part of its ministers than at the present time. With all the allurements of fleshly facinations that beset the church on every side, with all the opposing theories that partake more of intellect than affection, with all the underhanded trickery and duplicity of false friends to meet and contend with, there is certainly a great need on the part of the church of some divine antidote or power to meet the opposition, and stem the tide that otherwise would overwhelm all spirituality and devotion, and corrupt the hearts of the children of God.

This antidote and power are only found in the spirit of Christ, whose indwelling power must be so complete and full, as to effectually debar an entrance to all influences that are evil and corrupting. Christ and purity must be stamped on every motive and every action. But how shall a church be pure and holy except its ministers be first consecrated? And how shall we be consecrated without a divine annointing? We may talk of the glorious appearing of our blessed Savior, and the reward of the inheritance for the faithful, but how shall a people be kept ready for these scenes unless we bring down to them from heaven a consecrating power so strong as shall subdue and render powerless every worldly fo? And how shall we bring this to the people if we do not possess it ourselves? The necessity of entire consecration is evident, but do we, as ministers rist feel it, is the question. We admit the necessity of giving up all hrist, but are we thus given up? Christ first, and the world last? e, is Christ all?

my own part, I feel that Christ be all in my heart and work. I hat the power must be of God, ot of myself. I see around me ossing and heaving billows of yinterests, and I know the power ercome is in Christ. It seems that the last great effort of Satan send his emimssaries forth with uth devoid of the power of Christ, us deceive men with an intellect-lvation. We have come to that

We must meet it squarely. We show that truth and faith and a ided hope are morally powerless ut Christ! We must show show urselves. We must be the very we preach. We must have a ospel, and a true faith, and a true but we must also of necessity the power of Christ in the Holy or we die. There is no half-way g place in this matter. We are last hour of time. Is it a time neyards, and oliveyards, and ly ease? Can we serve God and non?

let us as ministers of Christ, ng a judgment message to a judg-bound world, see to it that our do not belie our words. May go our last hold upon this world, crucified with our blessed Lord. while Satan makes his last on-t to overthrow faith by a mock anity, let us throw ourselves into ach and let the world know a heart work in Christ, a power and to keep pure from all the inating influences of an ungodly

This amount was raised by collections and the delegates' sums, and the above bills paid, besides paying $28.80 for the hall and advertising, and a balance (too small to be divided among the preachers as usual) of 18.27 left for the treasury.

On motion the President appointed as a committee on ordination, B. P. Stevens, A. C. Newell and M. R. Miles.

The following joint resolution passed:

Resolved, (1) That the Secretary be requested to collect and arrange for publication the statistics of this Con. and present the same for the consideration of the next Q. M. (2) That in order to assist the Secretary in carrying out the foregoing resolution, each church co-operating with us be requested to forward to him the name of its minister (or ministers), the number of its [living] members' its services, when where and how held, and such other information as may be of interest or necessary to carry into practical effect the tabulation of our Conference statistics.

Br. J. E. Wells was appointed to fill a vacanep in the protracted meeting committee occasioned by Br. Fenn's absence from the State. Br. A. C. Newell was appointed to give the opening address at our next meeting; B. P. Stevens, alternate.

We had preaching from the following brethren and sisters during the session, and as the texts may be of interest as showing the general features of the meeting I give them:

Br. Greenman: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things God hath prepared for those that love him."

Sr. M. L. Stoddard: "Despise not prophesying.'

Wm. Ingmire: "And that knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, THE DAY is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light."

B. P. Stevens: "But the judgment shall sit and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

C. F. Sweet: "And judgment is turned away backward and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter."

D. Cogswell: "But man dieth and wasteth away, yea MAN giveth up the ghost and where is he?

Dr. Barbour: subject: "The Commune or International Society and its overthrow of the governments of Europe as brought to view in prophecy."

Sr. E. S. Jennings: "Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fullness of joy; at thy right hand are pleasures forevermore,"

There were eighteen ministers present during the Conference but the time did not admit of so many sermons. All however took part in the singing praying and exhortaiton.

There was much good feeling and joy in the countenances of all the lovers of Jesus and his coming, at the increasing evidences of its nearness. We had several excellent social meetings, some earnest prayers, good singing and general good cheer. We were glad to see Br. J. C. Smith from the East who also love the appearing of Jesus, and waits for his coming kingdom. The meetings on Sunday were held in Corinthian hall which was half or more filled—even that being a large audience. Two were baptised at noon, and 247 partook of the Lord's supper in the p. m. A the close of the evening six arose to confess Jesus and to start in his service. The brethren in Rochester have been greatly encouraged and it is believed great good was done in the name of the Lord. The place of the next meeting was not decided upon in the press of other matters. Let the invitations be sent in to the President early.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

The first Q. M. of this district of the Iowa A. C. Conference met at Spring Branch, Nov. 23. A good representation of delegates and members present. Officers chosen for the year: President: A. S. Lewis of Elk Valley; Secretary: Sr. M. J. Janes, of Strawberry Point; Treasurer: Sr. M. V. Plank, of Spring Branch.

Reports of ministers and churches showed a will to live, and to do for God. Br. Kenny read a letter from a brother who has not as yet joined the Conference, which greatly cheered our hearts.

In view of the wants of the cause, the question of circuit preaching came up, and after due deliberation the following committee on circuit preaching were appointed: M. V. Plank, S. Bradhurst and Br. Beddo. The report of Committee being called for, the following preamble and resolution was read and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, we believe it to be for the advancement of the cause to make the most of the labor and to divide it among us as equally as possible; therefore,

Resolved, that we recommend that the churches in this Q. M. unite in maintaining circuit preaching; and to accomplish this object we further recommend that each church in this district at the earliest possible moment appoint a committee to solicit and collect funds for the purpose of sustaining such preaching one half of the time. It shall also be the dutp of this committee to ascertain the day and hour their respective churches can have a house of worship, and inform the Secretary (at Strawberry Point, Iowa) without delay; that the arrangement may be perfected at the earliest possible moment; and we call upon our ministers to cooperate with us in this desirable object, that the cause may be built up and souls saved.

The following resolution was also unanimously adopted:

Resolved, that this Conference recommend that each member subscribe for THE TIMES, and interest himself in getting his friends and neighbors to subscribe and thus aid in the good work of letting our light shine and spreading the good news of the coming kingdom.

Adjourned to meet with the Elk Valley Church, at the Otisville S. H., Thursday eve. before the first full moon in Feb. '72. The meeting was characterized by unity and love and will prove a blessing to all who had the privilege of sharing there.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 26, 1871.

Business Agent's Department.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES is published weekly by the Western Advent Christian Publishing Association, at Buchanan, Mich.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand;" his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed; the atonement; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil; the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D. R. Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,

To whom all communications should be addressed.

"Good Tidings."

The long looked for "Conference Book" has now appeared with the above title. Send for a copy. $1 in cloth. 50c. in paper, post-paid.

That Reaper.

Will not the ministry call the attention of farmers to the fine chance we offer them to obtain a good Reaper at a low price? Help us sell this machine, and you will help the cause in so doing.

Prophetic Chart.

Shall this projected Map of Symbolic Prophecy be published? Turn to the description of it in late numbers of THE TIMES, and see if it is not just what every church and minister needs. Will you take one? One Hundred Subscribers are are needed to ensure success.

The Minstrel.

A new edition of the Minstrel is now ready, and orders for copies in paper or cloth covers will be promptly filled. In paper covers, $1.50 a dozen. In flexible cloth, $2.20 a dozen, post-paid. Single copies in paper, 15c. In cloth, 25c.

Detroit.

Traveling Adventists stopping in Detroit will find Br. Lind at the corner of Tenth and Labore Sts., who can give information concerning Adventism in that city.

Association Notice.

A few persons have made no response to our request for the return of their shares for transfer. Will they please write us soon what they will do? Direct W. L. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

Wanted.

We will be be obliged to any one who will give us the following P. O. Addresses,

W. R. Howe, Kansas; Eliz. Collins, formerly of Troy, N. Y.; E. P. Bardett, formerly of Hancock Co. Ill.; J. S. Wheeler and C. M. Polley of Wisconsin. tf

Nothing Better.

It is generally agreed that there is no better work upon the question of the nature of man than The Doctrine of Immortality, by James H. Whitmore. We have been selling the work at a very low price in order to procure for it the widest possible circulation; but have not sold less than one dollar's worth at single orders. It has occurred to us that many, perhaps, would like a single copy, or two copies, who would not wish more than that. Therefore, we give notice that we will send the book by mail, post-paid, to any address (in the United States or Canada) for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. Who will avail themselves of this liberal offer?

Sheldon's Latest Volume.

Sheldon's new book, The Life Beyond Death, is now ready. It is one of the author's happiest efforts.

Pp. 144. Price, 25c. Sent by mail, pre-paid on reception of the price. A liberal discount by the quantity. We have incurred considerable expense to bring his work before the public in an attractive form; and trust it will be liberally circulated, as it deserves to be. Don't be without it, to read, and to lend.

A discount of one-quarter will be made by the dozen; one third for twenty five, and one-half for one hundred copies, for distribution. We wish to get the book before the people, and offer these low rates as an inducement to purchasers.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We propose to issue about the first of January a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent-Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained; with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists; and we trust no such family will do without it. ☞ The price will probably be 10 or 12c.

A few pages of select advertisements will be admitted. For terms, apply at this office.

Harvey's Exchange Bank.

Among the sterling results of individual integrity and enterprise, encouraged by a settled purpose which animates all successful undertakings, is an institution located at No. 70 West Lake street, and known as Harvey's Exchange Bank and Commission House.

In a commodious structure like that occupied by this well-known firm, it is barely possible that the peculiar demands of an exchange bank and commission merchandise could meet a more favorable disposition, each particular feature being adapted, it would seem, to favor such an end.

The interests involved in a business of the nature alluded to are many and complicated, and in their multiplicity insist upon an unusual discrimination and practical experience, with any quantity of industry in subserving the desires briskly executed of patrons.

All of these desiderata in the proper prosecution of an exchange bank and commission merchandise are guaranteed in Mr. Harvey, whose standing in the community is deservedly high.

The Proposed Chart.

We confess to but little faith, at first, that our ideal of a complete prophetic chart could be realized. But we knew that many desired such a map of prophecy, and so made the proposition to publish if a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. The response is encouraging. Shall we have the needed names?

John S. Lawver, M. B. Geer, Eld. J. Raymond, C. C. Marston, F. Burr, the Chicago church, D. O. Hink, I. C. Wellcome, J. F. Huber, Grand St. (N. Y.) church, Auburn (Ill.) church, C. Libby (pd.), R. R. York, Wm. M. Hall, J. C. Stone, W. E. Brown, M F Wistrom.

Who will help fill up the list?

Pledges.

The undersigned agree to pay the sums affixed to their names, toward paying the debt of the Western Association (about $1,000) whenever the full amount of the debt shall have been pledged.

H Hubbard, $5,00; S Pike, 10.00; B P Betts, 5.00; Thos Davidson, 5.00; G E Merrill, 5.00; H W Norville, 5.00; F A Childs, 25.00 (pd); Jas P Morse, 1.00; A C Haselton, 4.00; A Brother, 5.00; A Brother, 150.00; A Friend of THE TIMES, 25.00; G Shartleff, 5.00; R Holder, 2.50; J F Huber, 5.00; R Mann, 5.00; Mary L Hunt (pd), 5.00; L S Conner, 1; E Cheney, 2.00; O N. $3; S Nye, $25; Cascade (Iowa) church, $10.00; L. It does seem to us that this list of pledges does not grow as fast as it should. We are doing something toward extinguishing our debt, but not enough. Seven more "hundreds" would wipe it out. Many are doing nobly. Will not others respond soon.

Obituary.

WINSLOW. Another Christian soldier has dropped from the stage of life. Moses Winslow, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., died Dec. 7, 1871. Br. Winslow was an old settler, and a resident of this place and vicinity for many years; and a strong and noble philanthropist. He held firmly the Advent faith and hope in the doctrine of immortality by a resurrection of the dead. Much respected and esteemed by his numerous acquaintances, all feel the loss of his valuable association. He has left a family and a worthy companion, who mourn in tears of grief the bitter loss of him who was their best earthly friend, shield and protector. His age was three score and one. Funeral services were at the Baptist church. ABEL LARKIN.

WHITE. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Surry, N. H., Nov. 4, '71, my wife's mother, Mrs. Abigail White; aged 75 years, 5 months.

The deceased was formerly a resident of Shrewsbury, Vt., where she embraced the Advent faith under the labors of Eld. French, twenty-five or more years ago. She has ever since maintained the faith with peculiar steadfastness and integrity. During her sickness, which was a cancer in the stomach, and very distressing, her faith and hope were very bright and clear. She prayed for each surviving member of her family, calling them by name, that they might meet her at Jesus' coming in peace. She often sang the line, "Glory to God, I am at the fountain drinking!" and often repeated the beautiful verse—"I would not live alway," &c. Also, "Fly swifter round ye wheels of time."

I think if I ever knew a Christian, she was that person, as many others could testify, some of whom are readers of THE TIMES. Thus the righteous fall; but shall it be said, "And no man layeth it to heart?" Nay, verily, for "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, they do rest from their labors," and a crown awaits them at his appearing. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

KINGSLEY. In Mayfield, DeKalb Co. Ill., Nov. 7, Clara, daughter of Br. M. B. and Sr. M. Kingsley; in the 13th year of her age.

For sweetness and gentleness of disposition, Clara was only surpassed by the loveliness of her person. By her innocent and winning manner she endeared herself to every one who knew her. We expect to meet her where cruel death will never come to rob us of our loved ones.

The students of the Grammar Department, in the school she attended, hearing of her death, offered the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, Miss Clara Kingsley, a recent member of the Grammar Department of the Sycamore Graded School, and well known to many of us, has been by the providence of God suddenly called from our midst, Therefore,

Resolved, That in her early death we have lost a dear friend; our school a faithful, earnest student; and though gone from among us, she shall still live in our hearts and memories.

Resolved, That to the family of our friend in this hour of their deep affliction, we tender our heartfelt sympathy.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Sycamore Republican.

By order of the School.

CO[illegible]WAY. In Rochelle, Oct. 29, Frank, son of Br. J. [illegible]away; aged 6 months.

Sermon by the writer. H. G. MCCULLOCH.

WYLLYS. In South Grove, Ill., Dec. 18, Br. George Wyllys; aged 60 years.

Br. Wyllys was in his usual health up to the moment of his death. All the warning they had of his decease was the throwing up of his hands and the exclamation, "Oh!" and our dear brother passed away. He has been identified with the Adventists for many years. He came to this country when it was comparatively new, and for many years did not hear an Advent sermon. Still he maintained his integrity, and when God raised up a people here, he was with them heart and hand. We shall miss him sadly; miss him, but not forever. The Sun of righteousness will soon arise, and drive away the shadows that gather so darkly around this sad world. The resurrection morning with all its glories bright, will bring our loved ones to our embrace, on that blest shore of immortality. Pray for his afflicted family.

Sermon by the writer. H. G. MCCULLOCH.

Notices, Etc.

Notice.

Churches, or individuals, desiring my services as an Instructor in vocal music, or as a Minister, are hereby informed that I am now at liberty to travel, and give lessons in music, or preach, as may be desired.

Please address, G. W. GREEN, Box 16, Memphis, Clark Co., Indiana.

Discussion.

I expect, the Lord willing, to hold a discussion in Farmer City, Dewitt Co. Ill., Jan. 2, 3 and 4, with Rev. S. K. Hallam, pastor of the Christian church in said place. The questions are:

1. Resolved, That man in death is subject to an utter extinction of conscious existence. Marston affirms.
2. Resolved, That God has a kingdom on the earth at the present time. Hallam affirms.
3. Resolved, That the punishment of the wicked will consist in the extinction of their conscious existence; Marston affirms.

There are to be three two hour sessions on each proposition. C. C. MARSTON.

Notice.

I will sell at a low figure, to any Advent preacher, who comes properly recommended, three lots of land —40, 80, or 120 acres. The land is 1½ miles from the Railway station, and has buildings, orchards, and sufficient water. My object is to procure in our midst a man of God, who will preach the word, regardless of popularity, to the Advent church in this region.

WEEKLY

ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR,

IN LARGE CLUBS.

Prospectus for 1870.

The Weekly Chicago Tribune, for the year 1872, will consist of first-class original and selected matter, embracing the latest news by telegraph and mail, down to the hour of going to press, editorials, correspondence, reports of the proceedings of Congress and the legislatures of the Western States, and of important public meetings and political speeches, financial and commercial intelligence, reports of the grain, provision, lumber, dry-goods, cattle and general markets, notices of new publications, and other literary and miscellaneous intelligence. It will also contain weekly summaries of information concerning the work of

REBUILDING CHICAGO,

And restoring its former greatness after its late devastation by fire.

The year 1872, it will be remembered is a

PRESIDENTIAL YEAR,

And the campaign will, in all probability, be as exciting as any that has transpired since the outbreak of the late war. The Chicago TRIBUNE will uphold and defend the principles of the Republican party with its accustomed vigor and earnestness. Our platform consists of:

Equal and exact justice, at the ballot-box and before the law, to all men, without distinction of race or color.

Amnesty for all political offences connected with the rebellion.

A tariff for public revenues only.

Preservation of the public lands for actual settlers under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Opposition to monopolies of every description, and to corruption in every form.

Such reform of the civil service as shall make men and fitness, instead of partizan zeal or personal favoritism the test of preferment to Federal offices.

Our readers, and the public generally, are so well acquainted with the tone and quality of the Chicago TRIBUNE, that we need not enlarge upon that subject. Near the close of the 25th year of our existence as a public journal, we had the misfortune, in common with a large majority of the business community of Chicago, to be burned out losing thereby the most commodious newspaper building in the United States, and being deprived, temporarily, of the use of our extensive printing machinery. We have commenced rebuilding in our ruined edifice on a more enduring plan than before, and we have effected arrangements for the use of machinery which practically gives us the same facilities that we possessed before the fire. Upon occupation of our new building and machinery THE TRIBUNE will be issued as an octavo and contain eight pages of reading matter.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE will be published regularly as heretofore each Wednesday evening upon the following

THE CLOW REAPER.

This celebrated piece of farm machinery, by Daniel Clow, of Janesville, Wis., was tested with sixteen other Reapers at Ripon, Wis., in July, 1870, and received the highest encomiums of them all. The standard of perfection for quality of work was forty. The Clow Reaper was marked forty, or perfect, by the committee. The other machines ranged from 26¾ down to 21½. This machine is specially adapted for its light draught—which saves horseflesh: it can be drawn all day by a pair of light horses. For its simplicity—which decreases liability to breakage or derangement. It has only one hundred pieces, where other machines have three times that number. For the arrangement for lowering and raising the cutters. For the facilities for turning and backing. It can be used as a mower as well as a reaper. No cog-wheels are used to drive the sickle. It has had fewer accidents from breakage than any other machine.

USUAL PRICE, $160.00;

but the machine presented to THE TIMES office will be

SOLD FOR ONE HUNDRED & TWENTY DOLLARS!

If taken soon.
